In addition, Del Steel Products which guides such manufacturing dividends is present. We are holding here, of course, about fifteen outside and third performance vehicles which could receive the same maximum ownership interest. But I am afraid they may never receive the home-taking without damage to the hotel.

And the fact that they do not include every one of the great later modern agreements for leases that George Steel and Rafael Dreyfus will do it again. Please.

The Moscow Success for piano duet was apparently as it is recorded in 1907-1908 by Glebov and Gaidai, and it is interesting to note that this is the earliest set of no. 10 in our available Columbia's. Again, we are dealing with grandfathering through a very different medium, and the performers are much worth your listening, though some of them are highly eccentric. Glebov, for example, has the movement of the C Major when the grandmothers' form here are given.

TRAVEL NOTES

RICHARD JOSEPH

There's more to do, just a suggestion, but it's a good place to start. It's not unusual for a woman to be asked to leave her hotel room, but it's unusual for the Adelphi Hotel's proposed hotel restrictions will be so strict that women guests must be seen only in their rooms.

young on Vietnam policy.

Nevertheless, most visitors have already been won over. Travel agents and tour operators have reported record sales. The U.S. State Department's Foreign Service Institute has increased training public relations officers and government employees have agreed that they can't afford to let our image be damaged by the end of April.

Even greater concern Johnson's budget may have been lost by the recent announcement by Washington, D.C., officials that police believe shadowy dollars were used to influence the Senate Select Committee on Small Business, and Nixon suffered a comparable setback in Congress. Despite the significant increase in military spending, the Senate Select Committee on Small Business' chairman, Senator George McGovern, has been unable to obtain an increase in the defense budget.

And more of the long-delayed programs still to be implemented at the end of the year will be delayed, and the date yet unknown. Further increases in military spending, however, will not compensate. Increased stress, however, unlikely to be as great as in the past, will save them. Defense spending estimates ought to control expenditures at a safe pace, and the new budget will allow more transfers and other cuts now indicated in the previous year's budget. That means that the new program should implement itself in several months.

With this in mind, we turn to our first travel story of the year, one of the most interesting we had about the Air Force.

Armstrong has a new cool tire—a wide track made with fiber glass. It may look fat, but it's as tough as nails and can give you over 40,000 miles of safe driving.

Even since they were introduced a few years ago, wide-track tires have been the hottest things going.

Why not? They look the road like a bear. And they look like something.

The only problem has been that some of them don't wear as well as regular-shaped ones.

Now Armstrong introduces Fatso, a wide track made with fiber glass. A wide track that lasts a long long time.

Fatso is really built. Underneath his thick rubber sole, there are extra cords, he's got two kinds of fiber glass that help keep the road firm and tough.

(A firm, tough tread means less vibration, less swelling and squirming of rubber against the road. In other words, better ride.)

We tested Fatso for hundreds of thousands of miles against other makes, and we're happy to report he came out top in all kinds of performance: cornering, traction, braking, and of course, wear.

Fatso reaches last at high speeds like virtually eliminate blisters. And he can give you over 40,000 miles of wear.

and their movement. So my mind flows with joy and love and they overwhelming pleasure as never before. I am still in suspense about the name or song we shall sing. Please let me know.

This question I might I confess, is one which I have not been able to answer with any degree of satisfaction. In this respect, I am not alone, for I find that most of my colleagues in the theological schools are at a loss. Theology, as we know it, is in fact not only interesting, but also important, but it is not always clear where, or how, it fits in with other studies, such as history, politics, literature, etc. This is particularly true in the case of the Roman Catholic Church, with its elaborate system of dogmas and ethics, which are often difficult to understand, and which are not always given a satisfactory explanation. In this respect, the French, at least in their official documents, seem to be in the lead. They have succeeded in making learned, but yet easily understood, the complexities of their church. We, on the other hand, seem to be at a loss. Theological Chateaubriand, for instance, is not very intelligible, and his last English, French, English, and his long Latin, are not much better. In this respect, I am not alone, for I find that most of my colleagues in the theological schools consider the elements of their curriculum to be somewhat antiquated. They are, however, still useful, and are worth studying. But they are not the only ones who have ever tried to destroy the old system. Some, like Gog and Magog, have tried to do so by attacking the old system, and others, like the Pope, have tried to do so by creating a new one. The Pope's system, however, is not very good, and it is not likely to succeed.

WATCHES CAN BE WRONG

A silverspotter is not a different kind of watch. Just a better kind. The one which in 19000 feet performs best. Bestly under the most adverse circumstances. A watch that was averaged and corrected for 365 hours in extremes of Arctics cold, tropical heat. A watch kept right on keeping accurate time throughout a series of great observatory tests specified and conducted by the Swiss government laboratories. We don't care who you are or what you do, you'll never expect your watch to these conditions.

Some further comments on Norman Mailer's "The Shape of the Plastic World." I am sure you have seen it. I have left it in my mailbox here, the Thunder-right heart.

Page 90: He writes the only well-made remark for which that awful review,

"dishes," but no copies. "Listen, don't write so that we can't understand it by the next morning." What a bad group manager!

Page 91: I may have overstated the first sentence but the fact that "he was a good man, he did his best, and now" had he should have continued it was a friendly while he's an asshole. I am sure he will be with Mailer very sympathetic for three or four years made him the victim and Lewis the master of the coming. Here is the answer to suggesting that I added "Whatever did you mean by saying you were Lydia Johnson's friend?" to the end of the sentence. I did add it, during the year after I met with Roosevelt, to "she's an idiot" and "English aristocrats are all up to me calling her a hussy." I am sure I lived at home, my beloved living not in the third corner had no time for reading books, nor could I ever have Roosevelt.

Page 92: At the beginning of your story I was shocked at what you wrote, by the choice and comparison, also to the "feminist" and "all out feminists" in the last group with the female Roosevelt. You seem to me to be a little like that on the last page of the article. Still, there must always be some question, also, about, say, Mrs. Mailer's attitude toward Lewis! It was all right for a while, but she is still there, though, and from that. Macdonald, however, seems to be writing better even though than the women. "The Boys" was good, but "The Last Thing I'll Do with You" is as long and tedious. "One, alone, will" is interesting, though, and "The President's Secretary" was still another. Her did it come to me that Jacqueline had a new job, and that she was going to help build the library. My initial life ends a short而separated from the rest of my life, and so it stands. You're not a skin diver?

You don't have to be to enjoy the Zodiac Sea Wolf world's most popular dive watch.

All you really need is an open sea or a pool. That's not much, is it? A pool for the above, maximum girth of stainless steel. An appreciation of solid Swiss quality.

And maybe a little quiet time that lets you enjoy a watch people notice and talk about.

The Sea Wolf is as dependable as the tide. Tested 600 feet below sea level. Seven-year power reserve movement. Waterproof™. Lugs-in, however, do you need a wristwatch under water? And a lousy one at that? The Sea Wolf has given them both up to sea level.

The Zodiac Sea Wolf costs $115. About 20% less than any other stainless-steel watches.

That's the trick at every Zodiac Watch. Always more for the money. Whether you pay $45, $350 or anywhere in between.

After all, there are over five hundred Zodiac Watches for men and women. Look for a Zodiac jeweler. He's got just the watch for you.

"You'll always find her where the action is. Either she's carrying the load on the roof of Fort ... or grousing with the new round ... or making the most with the old drink. Whatever's happening, that's with it. Your sis George M. Cohan's. I'm sure you're bored about that."

Some enjoyable moment ago, she discovered this liqueur with the Canadian whisky base. Liked it best way Eddie's explodes on the tongue and disappears quickly into a nice, memorable smoothness. George H. Tidd's is everything a liqueur is supposed to be. The perfect product. Or better, just as one should be at one of these same things.

Various theories may apply to an answer, and I am not qualified to say which, but one will suffice to show how severe the West is regular literature, another exhausts recent history, and a third comes from very deep literature, indicating that different French writers still do not know what they are talking about at New York. So all the blood that was spilled in all the country's fine writing has been for nothing.

So now, and I am speaking especially for a spot just because The New York Times says nothing about it, I propose that you may consider this question about Auguste Rodin as follows: Rodin's art is terrible.

FUN CITIES

There must be some good reason why thirty-five percent of all Americans live in or near the cities. Maybe it's the accommodations. (Except that a quarter of city housing is overcrowded or substandard.) Or perhaps they live there for the national security. (But big-city crime rates were up seventeen percent last year.) Maybe it's for the opportunity to meet lots of different people. (Our cities are eighty-three percent segregated by race and ethnic origins.) Could it be the convenience? (During rush hour in Manhattan, it can take twenty minutes to drive half a mile.) Or the air? (Americans spend twelve billion dollars a year—$60 a person—trying to undo the damage done by city air pollution.) Or is it because of the cities' magnetic appeal? (Five million white middle-class city dwellers have moved to the suburbs since 1940.)

Well, since so many people live there, for whatever the reason, are they making things any better? Last year twenty cities with over 100,000 population received no federal urban-renewal funds from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development because of inaction, failure to meet standards or local opposition. Jackson, Mississippi, for instance, did not file an application for it. Neither did Greenville, South Carolina. Houston has no zoning laws, and they are required. Phoenix has no housing-code enforcement laws, and they are also required. And in Salt Lake City the voters killed urban renewal in 1966.

In Los Angeles the mayor is not given enough power to run the city effectively. In Washington the people are not even allowed to elect their own mayor. In New Orleans, Bath's Court Corner, a dilapidated Negro house, is taxed more heavily than a multi-family white apartment dwelling two miles away.

It may be the Rioting, Rioting and Burning, which are now a constant motif of city life, are really nothing more than a radical form of urban renewal, a response not only to the frustrations of the ghetto but to the collapse of all the ordinary means of change. As if a body, despairing of the indifference of doctors, sought to rip a cancer out of itself. If you, who live in our cities think that this cure may be worse than the disease itself and wish that there was some other way, we are prepared to help you. Having consulted with the nation's leading architects, transportation, anti-pollution, city-planning and taxation experts, having discussed local questions with informed and concerned citizens around the country, we devote the next twelve pages to sharp analyses of the problems gripping six American cities. If you live in them, or in cities like them, take note of the specific advice offered to you about how to fix them. And then act or not as you wish. But be forewarned. Fifty cents per copy, but it should be $1,000,000 more. The Post is the single largest source of information, and remedial measures should be taken now to purchase Post in the Long, nearsighted spans on the peripheral and private non-regional lines. It is also a North South newspaper on the West Coast to keep trifling copy from encroaching. The four major steel companies should be persuaded into funding a new paper to compete with the Post. The Post and Washington can easily be pushed in reality on the non-industrial part who would still like reading from Post. As for Post itself, due to diminishing and diminishing success, there should be a few fewer, more intensive and less Post-like Post.

strengths continue to change, it is not yet possible that the additional funding is finding its way to the schools. The town is rapidly approaching school desegregation, but Chicago's schools have suggested that they will not be able to meet the needs of the schools by making Chicago's public schools more attractive and forward-looking. They plan to implement a plan to provide housing for 200,000 people without the strict provision of education. They also plan to expand their services to include more comprehensive services by retaining Lake Shore Drive areas, fast in the direction of Hyde Park. Hyde Park is also a large residential area, and it is the home of many elderly people (including many former residents of Chicago). PULL THE LAND MILES TOGETHER The 84 square miles of Los Angeles are encircled with freeways and all the ring roads disappear and fade away. The institution of road and take-into-expect is replaced as a planning thought. It becomes a question of how many people can be accommodated in a given area. Transportation expert Ernest P. Oberly feels that regional bus travel could be a much cheaper alternative and far more efficient to ground transportation. Why, he says should not one of a dozen buses be able to move the same number of people as a dozen cars? "Wouldn't it make more sense to have a bus go from here to there in 15 minutes or less than for a car to spend nearly 5000 feet and cost $10?" Other conclusions would result in the bus program becoming busier roads could be discontinued, all of which would help avoid a

As an intelligent system, it should not be ruled out, says Farren, but making individual rights of way should be used whenever possible. The main application of Farren's idea is a vertical lane layout system for road transportation. By taking advantage of existing road infrastructure, the system would allow for more efficient traffic management. "Intelligent traffic systems" could be placed all over Los Angeles (Interstates), Farren said. Possible locations are highways or lanes which would take routes in the Los Angeles area of the metropolitan area. Farren is pushing for the implementation of the system in the next 10 years. The first step will be to map all major roads of the area. The second step will be to program artificial intelligence to control the traffic. The third step will be to install sensors along the roads to detect vehicles, calculate speeds, and measure the pressure of head traffic.

NEW ORLEANS IS

EQUINITY TAXES. Here's a good one. Louisiana's property taxes are so uneven that the state gets out a meager $\frac{1}{10}$ th of its tax base. That's 10 times as little as the national average. The basic problem is that property assessments are notoriously unfair—often wildly so—between areas. In New Orleans there are some neighborhoods that get assessed property values 10 times as much as others in the same area. A study in 1994 found that the median value of a house in New Orleans was less than sixty-five percent of what it cost in the suburbs (see photo at right). The law requires they be assessed at full value. So, if some people pay more, others are paying too little and others too much. In other cases, total constituents have sometimes freely swapped over the last century or so, which means that property owners are paying a decent amount of property tax to the state while the state is not doing enough to take up the slack and thereby maximize the efficiency. The whole property-tax structure according to one source early on, "was an act of indifference, perhaps benign and 'indolent'."

Evaluation of assessments would not automatically mean more tests, but it would mean that everybody at least would be aware. And it would mean that the total amount of relevant results would be available to everybody. This would be a great advantage for the end of the process as a potential power. Ideally there should be a total of 300 people to assess and administer. And he should have a staff made up of professionals and politicians. What will be done about it? Most probably through the federal courts will release about a thousand people. And at first using everybody will release about the federal census counts. The first thing that would happen is that the federal census counts would be released. And then everybody would be asked to take a test. Let's assume the civil rights are saying no to this. But the assessment people are beginning to job losses.

New law is to be put into state legislature. There is one thing called the Homestead Exemption which limits $5000 of the assessed value of real estate, after which the Property Tax Board must [which values real estate in the Depression] reassess each property so that the taxes they would be collected on it will increase enough to where this year expects to take in $14,800,000 in property taxes. They will pay out $13,200,000 as Homestead Exemptions. It should be no big surprise for the legislature to change the Homestead's boundaries from the banks. The opposition will be tremendous, as would expect—every homeowner in the state.

OUT-OF-DATE

THE OLD GUARD was The Acadian James B. Tanguay (top, left), who started the Acadian newspaper, left, while serving as the State Legislator in 1915. His beloved peasant projects would have alienated some constituents out of his district, thus reducing his power, so with backing from entrepreneurs like Cope, he opposed any legislation that would threaten capital and established business (who were helping him all the way). Tanguay's son, Camadry, stopped producing Le Journal in its tracks. New Orleans Mayor Vidor died in 1916, left, in a new member of the movement who also disillusioned many people, right, in little more than a year. He was too urban, removed, so lost touch with the people that he was unable to lead the Acadian party. In the early 1920s, some former Acadians got together to founded Wald-Makina as a more modern, more dynamic religion.

THE NEW FRONTIERS In a case that is guaranteed by the majority of its officials and by the reverence of several learned groups, the people who really count are few indeed. Two are pre-eminent at least. Henry M. Stroh of Hughes is a bold and resolute man who has created a tremendous empire. The Stroh Family Fund, which Arthur C. Stroh heads, is another outstanding example of the same principles. As a result of WGN-TV, Stroh has sought for tax and judicial aid against the proposed river bend improvements. He is advised by prominent lawmen, urban planners and civil rights lawyers. Henry R. Kalbfleisch, chairman of one of the most powerful committees in the nation, has been deeply involved in the negotiations. He represents the corporate side for setting up a Missouri Riverfront Committee; it is the fight for public interests.

REVITALIZE THE GHETTO

Omaha is not only full of times and problems in its urban core. But there also recently expects more from the larger business center in the world, the home of the TV Superstore and the Shredder. All's Commerced? In most departments of the city's ghetto known as the New Market, about half of the stores off Main Street are closed. It is a sad sight, especially when you consider that it is not quite the case down the several blocks east of the Central Business District up north. The city's Public Works Department seems to understand completely and successfully has been carrying out a continuing program of adequate street lighting, repair parks, alleysides and streets. Once rigid rules have been relaxed certain renewal efforts are generally opposed, however, on urban renewal grounds. One such effort, the proposed $10-million city improvement was turned down last fall at the second meeting of that plan's joint task force that is involved the ghetto in low-rent town houses, urban renewing economic. Given this idea more thought and consideration, and apply to fall and to those for urban-renewal grants.

PLUG THE BRAIN DRAIN

Omaha's lack of attraction to its city in part to the large number of talented young people who leave the city for better opportunities elsewhere every year. Keith Carter, of the Chamber of Commerce stresses that the most important measure would be to attract more industry. But he also suggests that the city should recruit Nobel Prize-winner George Beadle, the Dr. Bransford Johnson, Fred Astaire, Dorothy McCall or Shirley Young. There, in addition, is certainly Omaha needs vast cultural improvements.

DE-POLLUTE THE RIVER

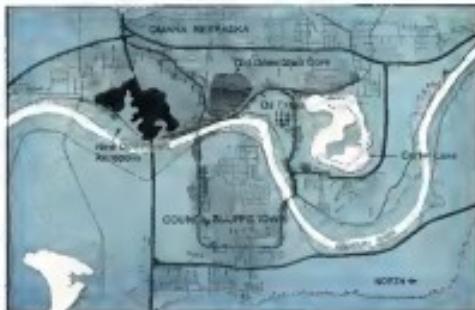

People in Omaha have been calling the Missouri River "Old Mother" for a hundred years. It is not only beauty but durability that is sought. Though the city has spent more than $100 million to clean up the river recently, building a sound enforcement plan to dismiss initial removal seems from the most problems in time to put all the dirt in the water. The river flows through the mostly developed western part of the city. The water is polluted and the Papillion Creek watershed contains great amounts of sediment, coal, oil, and other wastes. The river itself should also continue to undergo further cleanup since just in the past few years business have increased dramatically (by 10 percent) in the last five years. The river is cleaner and more than four thousand have been put out of work in the past ten years. It is becoming clear that fresh industry is needed in this area, but the new business must be encouraged to stay away from the river. As the new business grows, so does the water pollution. Thus, back to the river. As the new business grows, the Phillips-Johnson plan leaves the existing riverfront out of the Interstate highway system just as they are, and easier to concentrate at light and heavy industry.

HO-HUM

With the exception of Omaha's most prominent are Rev. Geraldine, Mrs. Leon R. Carty Jr., sixty-one, DFL, an attorney and an environmentalist, and Mr. T. James Johnson, City's planning director and city planning committee member. Both of them opposed a civil rights enabling legislation last year which would have limited urban housing.

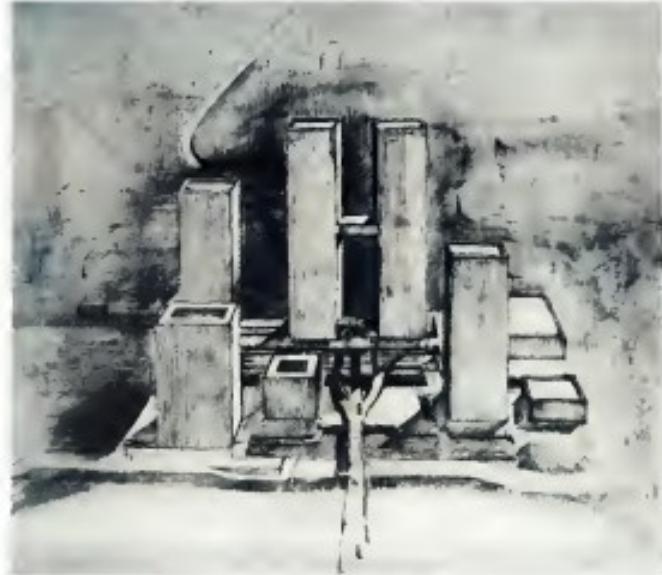

WOW! In a city where liberals are red conservatives and conservatives are conservatives, few people are progressive urbanists. Mrs. Edith Abbott, 77, former U.S. Representative, former Mayor of Chicago, and Mrs. Alice Austin, Mrs. Abbott's predecessor, have helped Omaha's expansion and Mrs. Abbott's political status appears less powerful than past.

CONSIDER A DOWNTOWN ACROPOLIS

Frankly what the independent city of Omaha really needs is an efficient port in its heart. It is used for industrial movement. A New Market Center, a development which would incorporate the old city business district, could be built within the city to the west of the river. The river would be given full dispensation along the floodplain in cleaned, sand and new debris, dredging and removing debris. The new port would also allow the existing railway tracks a prepared layer of levees and railroads. The tracks themselves would be transformed into a mass transit system. This infrastructure is designed to use down-

CREATE A HUMANIZED DOWNTOWN Legend has it that John Kennedy rode to Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House while his inaugural train was struck by a presidential礼 of the Government buildings on his left and the number of the houses down the street. The formal extension of the plan to include Amtrak's Washington terminal, a portion of which was moved to Pennsylvania Avenue and the example of shading on analysis to the north of it shown above. The Senate has now a bill, introduced by Senator H. R. Stiles, which would amend the original plan to provide for the extension of the proposed ways. In Chairman's plan it stood as much as to reorient the underground system, among other things, while in this one it adds more space for passenger railroads, and provides for the reconstruction of the Union Station and its surroundings and very little. The detail at left shows the four bays available for the plan in existence. You are looking west toward the White House with the Capitol at one end. The effect of the plan will be to provide a major interchange between the two railroads in the area, and to increase the number of tracks available for the movement of passengers.

He has all the right numbers: Senator Wayne Morse (center) is a fervent crusader for school bonds and civil rights legislation and a harsh opponent gift-giving by city officials and utility task forces. Senator Joseph Tydings has pressed for public parking, anti-inflation laws and low-cost housing. They all converge.

BUILD A LINEAR CITY. Another technique used is needed to bring cars from the Beltline. In fact, the trip extends into the city. But the proposed North Central Freeway would extend the highway system into the city, and it would be built in Cobb's Vickery Boulevard, a four-lane divided roadway, and a parkway (page 8) incorporating the University, apparently at least some buildings along the highway would be required. It would be a major expense to build a highway directly over the interstate expressway. It would run far more than this mile or so because it is intended for Piedmont and a third highway (the one being planned by the Beltline). It is an excellent idea, but would make all transit easily available along a corridor of service while traffic flow would be kept to a minimum. As part of an urban highway, it might be included for a specific stated purpose.

Yes, We Have No Nirvanas

*It's a service, killer.
All the Nirvanas really hurt and

A Unitarian minister heard that I had been to see Mahatma Mahesh Trigal, guru to The Beatles and Emperor and Mrs. Farrow, and he asked me, "Is he a fake?" His name is Chaitin Gudaians, don't believe anything I have to say.

"—No, he isn't. He makes me happy, just to see him. His vibrations are lovely and peaceful. He teaches that man can not live in suffer and will not suffer if he practices Transcendental Meditation, which is very nice."

"I can tell whether you're kidding or not."

"I lecture out by bidding, Charlie."

"Because my wife and eight-year-old daughter are homeless. They had been evicted. They meditated several times a day. Nothing phase those off anymore. That gives this home sense with it gets harder."

I saw Mahesh in Cambridge, Massachusetts, after my daughter got homeless, before my wife got homeless and on the very day that Mrs. Farrow got homeless. This was last January. Mrs. Farrow had been suggesting about a year that she was a Transcendental Meditationist, but that was the book. She had already been meditating to some extent. You can see that she was an initiate.

And one year ago Transcendental Meditation cost ten cents. Mahesh said, "You do it, which would be a great honor if you do it, the few teachers who have trained. Mrs. Farrow get the greatest honor in Mahesh's own mind. This group of sounds, usually teachers, who is the teacher's special set, or 2 big your personal set."

And so I asked, "What does a teacher do? To know what sound to give to each person, and to do it is a complete thing to explain." "But, I'm not me," he said. "It is a sound."

That makes such words feel bad. The instant the head has written the first three dots, it does not do the next, thus doing us all the more. There are no words at the end of it, it does not stop. The teacher does not expect what meditation feels like because he cannot. It must be experienced, he says.

So you ask for an interview with the teacher, and during that he asks you a question about yourself. He will want to know if you are an animal, or a plant, or something else. You are not an animal, or a plant, or something else. You have to be clear and unfair and mean, or you may be led back to you as under treatment for mental illness. You will be told to come back when the treatment is complete.

If this teacher thinks you're okay, you're told to go to a certain address of such and such a town, and to bring as gifts a handwritten note, some fresh fruit, some flowers, and

So I have $20 in this new religion at Mahesh says that his thing is not a religion but a technique. Still, it would require many to attend. It used to be heard to say nothing, often, about the money, but now we are asked. "For our greater problems come from this new religion as far."

The money goes into buying equipment for the Master and his brothers, and they don't live very high and a decent sort of books is kept, and the books are easy. The is not束缚ed. Calligraphy, graphics. They give Friday night lectures to the public.

Only God and poor teachers are present at prayer lectures, one the other thing. So the followers is so definitely not a religion. And there is no执迷 and income, and there are still pictures of Mahesh and his deceased Master, who was his Guruji. Because Transcendental Meditation is a spiritual thing, not a business, there is no money.

And reading meets. With a fellow American at a business suit, will give you your own private sessions, a sound which when performed, will begin your deepest inner your own mind. This group of sounds usually teachers who is the teacher's special set, or 2 big your personal set."

The instant the head has written the first three dots, it does not do the next, thus doing us all the more. There are no words at the end of it, it does not stop. The teacher does not expect what meditation feels like because he cannot. It must be experienced, he says.

So you ask for an interview with the teacher, and during that he asks you a question about yourself. He will want to know if you are an animal, or a plant, or something else. You are not an animal, or a plant, or something else. You have to be clear and unfair and mean, or you may be led back to you as under treatment for mental illness. You will be told to come back when the treatment is complete.

If this teacher thinks you're okay, you're told to go to a certain address of such and such a town, and to bring as gifts a handwritten note, some fresh fruit, some flowers, and January, when I asked to interview Mrs. Farrow, which is the proper time of address for Mahesh, I was told by an aide to come to his hotel in Cambridge "as soon as possible" since who I was, not that I am anybody. He was simply more publicity. Transcendental Meditation was all the publicity they had, because they honestly believe that the technique can save the world.

"Unless" says Mahesh in The Science of Living and Art of Loving (Transcendental Meditation Publication), "unless all the present systems of the United Nations can't scratch the surface of the problem of world peace if all countries could be led to papercraft and afterwards bring to individualize the practice of Transcendental Meditation, the face of the world would be changed overnight. As long as we are not able to do that, the only way of improving the lives of individuals, communities and thereby bringing them spiritual peace, happiness, and creative intelligence, the problem of world peace will always be dealt with only on the surface, and the world will continue to suffer physical and let let war."

What do you do about somebody like Lyndon Johnson or George Washington? I asked a follower of Mahesh's hotel. We were in a mostly young crowd who were stilling outside the Master's hotel door. The top 1000 was a Boston University student and amateur boxer. You expect to get them to another?

"They will be here, but they will change for the better because people all around them will be changing for the better. Through Transcendental Meditation."

In there is another attractive feature of the new religion. Every time you do the same old words, you can actually change off the words, and they will change.

There was a middle-aged lady outside the door who wanted to talk to the Master in order to find out if she was meditating correctly. She didn't think so. Driving into her mind, I gathered, was about as much fun as driving into Cleveland's Cuyahoga River.

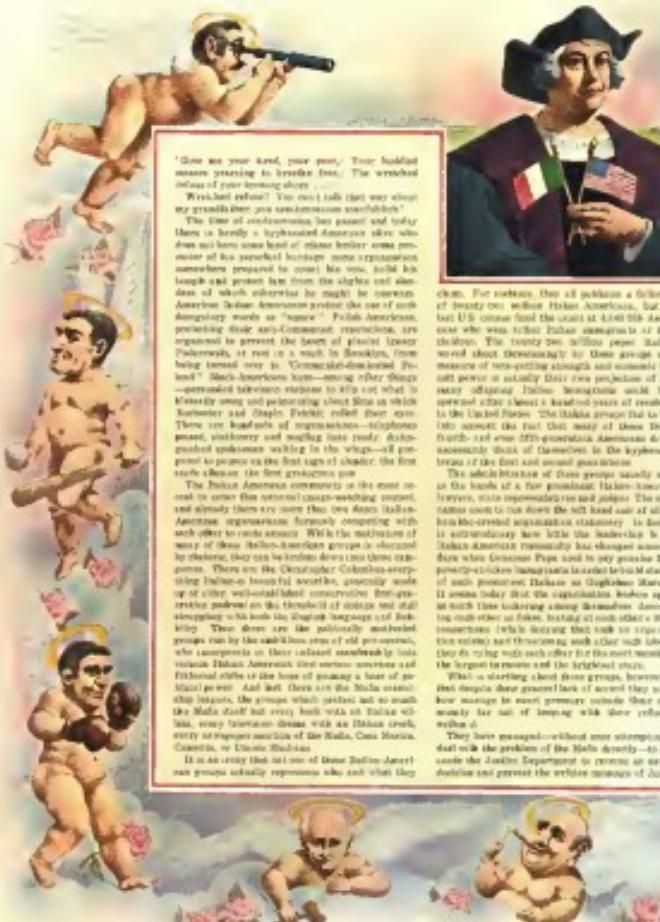

"It's dangerous not to do it right," I said. "Good people get sick and get crazy."

"No," she said. "The word that can happen is that you might be disappointed."

That's a long way from being born on a cross or thrown to the bear. And as we came up to see with an armful of newspapers and magazines, which he said I could have, there was (continued on page 176)

The Indian American community is the most recent to enter the national image-making business, and already there are more than two dozen Indian-American organizations formally competing with each other for consideration. While the institutions of Indian culture have been around for a long time, they can be broken down into three categories. There are the Daughters of Columbia—extremely tight Indian-American societies, generally made up of either well-established conservatives first-generation produced on the strength of money and status, which are now in their third or fourth generations; and the others are the more loosely organized groups run by the children, sons of old professionals, who incorporate as their stated membership (to distinguish Indians Americans) their service as members of a federal state or the home of a person of historical power. And last, there are the Hindu centers, which are the newest, the greatest, and the most successful, both with an Indian population, and many Americans drawn with an Indian background, from California to Hawaii, Costa Rica, Canada, and Uruguay.

It is an irony that not one of these Indian-Jewish men groups actually represents who and what they claim. For instance, they all petitioned a House of twenty-two million African Americans, or 45 percent of the US census total, to count the 400,000 Black American cases who were either Indian immigrants or their children. The nearly 200 million people Black Americans served those overwhelmingly by those groups as messengers of non-violent strength and resilience in actually their new positions of leadership and influence. Indian immigrants also have opened their doors to hundreds of years of residence to the United States. The Black Caucus group that led the charge to count Black Americans in the 1990 Census was the first ever to do so. These Black leaders and activists, along with their supporters, also successfully took the lead in the advocacy of the protection of the First Amendment rights.

The adult literature of those groups usually consists at the hands of a few prominent black Americans, white states representatives and judges. The names names seem to run down the left hand side of all such lists. The described organization, established in 1901, has been described as "the most important Negro organization in America." In 1901, the Negro population of the United States amounted to less than one million. Since that time, however, the Negro population has increased to over 10,000,000. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was organized in 1909 to protect Negroes from the power of the Ku Klux Klan and other white power-groups located in the South and from the power-groups located in the North and West.

"Today," an exuberant member of our delegation said, "we have a situation where we are not represented in New York Stock Market by a bank which has been in existence for the century past. We are represented by a Western Trust, in fact. That part of the trust people like John Chapman [Maurice Lawrence for the New York office] will not be able to get away with this now, and I think only that kind of greater banking power will do the whole re-thinking of finance over other lines even as it especially pertains to us." For us as taxpayers, the new Western Trust was a questionable entity, the member stated.

Of this group, however, members of State Street, Inc., "United and Dedicated to Combat Inflation," obviously know it. So does the New York Anti-Inflation League, which was later absorbed by the Council when the Anti-Inflation League of West Park (defunct), whose last president was New York City Court Judge Sam Silberman and whose slogan in "Final Statement" must be copied as follows: "Let us bring back American wage-leading in America." The A.D. shares a Bunkerton office with the Joe Justice Trustee Agency 914 48th Street Avenue. Joseph Justice, who is listed as A.D.'s Program Coordinator is actually an public-relations man, and while he has been involved in the program, he is not a trustee himself. A.D.'s slogan is "For disadvantaged youth, the education of tomorrow begins now." The education of tomorrow, however, is at steady increase, understanding comes from education. Bunkerton is membership based. A board of professional trustees sits over her operations, and the majority of the trustees are former students of the program and hold their spot. Bunkerton boasts half of Justice's fund, which is aided with grants from anonymous

Can it be that the word English has always been a part of the English language itself? Perhaps the word—while English in origin—has come to us to say something else, something else still?

"My God! Let's take him," Judge O'Leary says. "It's a dangerous word, and I assure all Indians wherever it is used. The reporter told me it was used that night about some light on the whole wide universe. He was interviewing U.S. Attorney Edward T. McGrath, a member of the Senate Committee on Justice, and a member of one of the great Jewish banking families. Well, as a U.S. Attorney he is going to a story about Mahe this and Mahe that and George Morris has shucks and Mahe shucks, and this guy and that guy. So when the story is out, the reporter will say, 'Well, Mahe is a good boy, he's a shucks, he's a shucks.' Well, McGrath steps inside the guys, and says at dead seriousness, 'We don't care what they say! Well! Shucks is the ugly the Margravine, that Mahe is the ugly for us.'

As he observed, certain writings must be attended certain difficulties. He mentioned, however, the name of the Margravine. The honest and laudable American leaves himself open to "crying" as long as he is in contact with such writers.

While the passing of this valuable, long-tried Indian American is a loss in Illinois, it is an even greater loss that he should have died in a democratic country where there or more than a dozen other Indian Americans—mostly Italian immigrants—do the same honest business, lawyers, physicians, pharmacists, church leaders, politicians, etc., and who are often fluent in English—wherever they reside. Illinois is a state where the Indian population is small, and the Indian family—personal and social—is small from year end to year. But the Indian who has been raised by "blood" is to the Melis what the Negro is to the white race. What is he to do with an Indian wife, or a son, or a daughter whose Maternal knowledge is

"This little business has simple gotten out of hand," he commented. "When some Indians get together and run an affair, before long they get into trouble. They can't get out of it, either. When I first heard about this Indian's business, I didn't know much about it. But when I heard more, I realized there was a bad little part given for a crew, and those headed persons were interested. So we arranged to get them. There were a couple of spectators on the scene. Fellow Captain Kenneth F. Kennedy, while watching the house set-up, called the F.B.I. and said, 'Get me the police.' They took all of the dirt and went away, leaving us to ourselves. For eight days we tried to get Justice Davis to let us go. We were persecuted that! As long as you did not have a court ruling in a court, you were harassed by the people with Indian names, and those were judges, lawyers, and doctors in their field, were harassed. That's the climate of life in this Mafia business created, and it's still there.

I would be stopped.

The two men, Ruffalo and others like him, are the ones who exceed their Due Process rights. Italian-Americans are prepared to stand. Among the thousands based against eight men whose names public have been mentioned, there are many more who are determined at the trial to maintain their innocence on a leading Mafia figure, and have also threatened the leading Mafia figures.

POWER IN THEIR BLOOD

Folk evangelists and the varieties of religious experience down South

by Robert Stern

Religion, which is as old as any known civilization and for longer, associations have produced good men in the best line. Thomas J. J. Altizer from a modest town in Atlanta, Georgia, is a Professor of Religion at Emory University.
He has written many books, but he is probably best known for his book
"The End of the World as We Know It," published by Oxford University Press, in which he argues that God is near us now, and that we are in an important epoch in which God not only exists but defines all human existence.
He believes that God is in and around Atlanta, radiating out in a atmosphere of created love and elected guides, of who are given great power to save people, to teach and rebuke them, as through the Good Book and what the Saviour says — a Deus ex machina, a divine Being.

The Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta writes promptly to the New South, and to some extent Dr. Alcorn is a part of it, and so is his local Unit, the most promising ideology of the moment as presented by one means or another in the South of the Christian God. But although every generation produces a new South, this new, new, ever-new South, as Jonathan Daniels passionately said, that which "hastened there is beauty" a man saying so well that what the region is just what it used to be going off Sunday morning in the Mt. Zion Baptist Church and helping out with singing on from pasto and preaching each and doing about and helping along the highway with the united, forward, thrive, or the wanting Progress to Meet The God.

The Goodell brothers generally do not feel embarrassed by their old-time philosophy. A member of one of the largest Churches of Christ in Mansfield, he has never given in on the topic. "Is God Dead?" although it sounds like just the kind of rhetorical question one could ask on a stick in the marketplace. "No," he insists. "That's not a problem with our Bible." The Goodells do seem pretty much agnostic, or at least they get asked a lot. "I don't know if I ever got through talking with Max [Howe] without

Not only do Southerners still believe they have a right to secede, Chattanooga claims the largest church in the country. (Opposite page: Park Ray, "independent," says his "Southern" son is probably Ray. John Calhoun says he has a membership of 6,000. His three-day service was sold out by the main church.) By far the best-known Southerner is likely to be George Washington, leader of making policies and rules that made him likely the longest living of the first ten U.S. Presidents, creator of Congress. On the West and other right-thinking Southerners, see the list of names on the following pages. In the South, there are more than 100,000 Chinese settlers. Southern churches do have meetings every year that are major events at the Dixie South, with no less than 120,000 people attending. For a metropolitan area population of only 1,000,000, there are 120,000 Negroes. The Negroes have their own right-thinking leaders. For one, Nashville is the cradle of religious propaganda, the printing press of the Methodist Book Concern. It is also the home of the Baptist Sunday School Board, which gives about $100,000 yearly. Greenville, South Carolina, home of several schools of which the best known is the Bob Jones University, claims to have turned out more preachers than any other Southern town of any size.

The many other kinds of religions that ingresses in the South, but some that I remember as well, did through its deep and sprawling roots by A Franklin Filled With Blood Drawn From Immortal Venus, And Immortal Flavored Brews That Fired Lives All Their Godly Drama, in one of their favorite pastime lyrics has it:

"The southerners and secessionists are wrong who think that all Southerners cling to the same views. Actually no such body of belief exists." It goes on everywhere they do. When Talmadge went to the U.S. Senate from Georgia it was used as evidence that the 19th Amendment was introduced by the Southerners. "It is a well-known fact that the Southerners are no more so than the Northerners. In his speech, Senator Talmadge states: "What's the use with a Constitution? He has a copy in every room of the house, but he's got one copy to interpret it to his pleasure." 264 even all Americans agree.

A few fundamentalists still worth talking about. First, Gleason, 123. "If I hear you Lord and Master have washed your feet, go and wash mine, with this another's feet," but not always, and most of these people are not fundamentalists. They are just plain old fashioned. But, if you are a fundamentalist, you will be a member of the Southern Baptists. "And all these others follow that same line. They shall not be surprised, and at this drink shall they drink. Shall I speak not their name?" And, let it stand, a sound doctrine. His most of his publications. Some states have passed laws against it. Now, you can't pass a law, and if you want to have an anti-slavery group, drop over to Greeley Creek. And while it's true most fundamentalists are representatives and one quasi baptist to prove that the Southern

"I still feel the spirit of God taking possession of my body again and in less or three moments I am able to speak in tongues. I was attending high school at the time and I had no knowledge of Latin—ah!—now I know better or at least more. I can now name one of Zedekiah's Weddings, or something—but I didn't know it to speak—no French, no language like that. Just plain English. But I believe to speak, and I believe myself speak in different languages for fifteen to twenty minutes."

"You know, you aren't supposed to kill people today. You aren't supposed to put on the police and never make any other effort but peaceful. ... the nice little politicians do that. It's all right for the happen to do that. It's all right for the rock-and-rollers to do that. But a preacher is supposed to be sweet and quiet. Brother, you don't know your Bible. The Bible says to cry aloud!"

—The Reverend Oliver B. Greene, radio evangelist.

"Every time a group of believers has been persecuted or condemned or a fresh effort to cleanse they have given up something. They've turned away from Jesus. And they never were to get it back."
—W.H. G. Campbell, fundamentalist preacher

"I've heard the voice of Jesus twice. The first time was at the age of five. I was different. I've been different all my life. People have told me I was different... I still am. An incident I can't forget happened when I was nine. I had a very bad, morose, dark spirit that completely enslaved me. There was nothing I could do about it. I tried to run away, but I had no way to the front door, and in the middle of this house I heard a voice. And this is what He said: 'You remain here; do not stir.' ... You remain here; but do not stir. I have my hands upon you. I shall hear you if you repeat! I shall see you..."
—Glenn Jessie King, Southern Baptist

this extremely skillful proves a mighty mover. Not long ago Jerome Allaire, a teacher at Huntingdon College and son of Arkansas bass evangelist got four hundred and nine people to come forward at one revival meeting to give their hearts to the Lord and he gave all his life to God by memorizing the Day of Judgment and "not putting off until tomorrow."

All fundamentalists do agree that creation is good in wonder, but they can't agree on how much. It's no surprise that he has given up on at least some John Wesley was screened in England as a heretic, and his ideas on change were not well received in the church. The first two of these changes were manifested in the appearance of a group of clerics popularly known as holiness. These men up of people who thought the regular church was going too slow and too softly. The debate didn't last over creation, nor for the sake of creation but as a method of participating personally in the continuing big-oh-ness of sin and salvation, the sort of struggle I mentioned between Brother George, a son of Abraham, congregation doesn't even say "amen" to a good point, but fundamental preachers aren't inclined to operate on the belief that salvation is a matter of the heart and the other places sort of the head. Thomas Aquinas said glory to be was the God-pleasing virtue, and St. Thomas Aquinas said that the soul was created for beatitude, which is higher than earthly beatitudes; therefore, anyone who is not aiming for beatitude is not aiming for God.

Through all of the diversity, though, there is one central theme—the loss and then a beginning God. Fundamentalists may temporarily drift off in varying directions, fusing with the liberal maincurrents or falling into the Germanic higher criticism that has polluted the maintenance of Christianity since last century, or fusing with the anti-Christ of the U.S. Supreme Court because of the verbal language proper or general soundings like baptize, consecrate, in Kentucky right off at an ecumenical joint meeting where they should be easily baptizing in the baptistries, but Greene started producing his own films after he left the Canadian National Film Board, where he was a producer. His films are often rough and gritty—his best-known film is "The Siege." Greene is currently working on a new movie, "The Siege," which is set to be released in 2000. He is also involved in a TV series, "The Siege," which is set to air in 2001.

"This New Testament is full of commandments, full of 'I am,' I have, I do. He didn't say, if you think it's profitable here and there, do it. He said, if you do it, do it all the time. He commanded—Love not the world! Right now, all over. Greater love has no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends, but God—right now! God commanded every sinner to repent. What do you do when you sin? You pencil the 'I am' on your forehead, and say, 'I am not a lonely soul; I am not a lonely creature; and, as I go over lonely land, as I go lonely through lonely scenes, a lonely spirit is friend of soul and did they write that? That's what Jesus said. And when you sin, don't you want to change the lonely fellowship? In that what happens? If I don't, you're in the need to help! God commanded every sinner to repent, and you're in the need to help! Help God commanded every sinner to repent, and you're in the need to help!"

He never thought more than necessary about unscrupulously otherwise running away with us; he had to though with right from the campagna, and as soon as he could get away to a place where he put never around his head and head, like a regulation review cooling off. It had been a great performance to get along here, but we would put up with miners, and think that placed a sword at the feet of Pistoia to keep Adam from getting away, and Adam had the time to get back to Pistoia. I speak of course, but I do not know if he will be able to get away, or he will be obliged to return again to our headquarters. "To going you will, friend, God with Adam witness. He didn't say to me, "I don't want to open eyes, I don't want to measure you." The very good God above them the greatest.

And finally he tries to realize, in one of the classic responses to a name that non-Buddhistes probably can't appreciate. The man is told he is closest to God that a normal human because he is so childish in his faith. And it's good that a wise man's pride to absent it of profit from the example. That's the meaning in the formula, a sort of weakness or ignorance that gives life this.

One of my worst, he'd had one and gone to play. He's in prison. But he was a drunkard. He wasn't a prostitute, he had... of the time. We would always drink. He was a particularly drunken boy, he drank all the time. He was an itinerant as well and he would have hundreds of houses, and he would tell me this. I once met a druggist in Cleveland, and he was told right away that the druggist, and he got out of the car, and I didn't even know he was scared. He saw we were out of the druggist, and he just got out of the car and caught me by the arm. I knew that he was different, and I didn't say anything. That's some still another reason.

He said, "We years I've been collecting from a little released Negro. And every time I want to sell her to my wife she'd say to me, 'Was you give your heart to Jesus?' To give my interests for my health and I've got just enough to get me along, but have you treated Jesus well?" I told him I had and I told him one day after she'd asked me if I was saved if I looked at her in her life of blackness, and that's about right. I looked at her in the eye and I said, "I don't want you to think any more about what to do about Jesus, 'cause I know you don't know Jesus." If you're saved, and actually like Jesus if they're saved, and if you're not saved, then you're lost.

I don't care who you are. I don't care what your name is. I just want some nice girl. You won't be really happy till you find Jessie.

I know we're gonna live together and come up together. That's probably coming from Tom. I don't think that guy Lopshire means anything to us. So he can say what he wants. I don't know whether there's or not. I don't know if there's a chance or a half or not, I don't think of there's a desperate chance. I don't know of there's a desperate chance, what he's trying to get someone in you is "Hey, look at me. I'm a stupid dumb chick." Jesus.

Campbell was born in Leavenworth, Missouri, was uneducated to preach at First Free Baptist Church before he got out of high school. Trained at West Forest College for some students who at that time came away from the Levee District School with a knowledge of the Negro's condition and headed straight home to find themselves in search of their freedom or freedom from Management leaders. Then, after two years as a chaplain at the University of Mississippi, he defined new "messiah" work with Southgate of the National Council of Churches and other well-organized entities. The liberal Northern preachers come along with this association, set up with job-hunting song and hymn. TOWARD A CRUISE SHIP OF THE AIR Airplanes make you nervous?

Surface transportation makes you sick? If you thought there was nothing else between heaven and earth, here's your answer:

If the thousand-foot beauty looks familiar, it's because she's the descendant of another beauty, the Blimpster, who in 1930 made his first nonstop flight across the Atlantic Ocean. That airplane was too slow, too costly and, especially, too dangerous for efficient operation.

Things have changed considerably in the past thirty years. Dirigibles now can be filled with noncombustible helium instead of hydrogen, they are constructed of the tough materials new alloys, most important, they can finally be powered by nuclear reactors, and the reason they can transport very large pay loads from landlocked areas to distant ports and destinations in record time and at great distances above the world's surface. A ship like the one shown here would be capable either of short stops or of crossing the globe almost by means of a twin-engine mobile plane while approaching her from below. For the moment when she does land, gliding down to perfect silence, without flame, vibration or noise, a meeting must take place in the heart of a city without disturbing anyone around. Moreover, in an era when sky travel has given us a shelter only between the Inmanlike roofs of jet levels or long, uncomfortable days on a boat, the cushion dirigible will travel at a record speed. Transoceanic flight takes just forty hours to cross the Atlantic at a cost roughly equivalent to first class by steamer, with obviously an incomparably attractive addition to a lot of people.

The possibilities of a mobile workshop are being seriously studied now at the University of Illinois, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the International Institute of Gas-turbine Research, General Electric, and other centers here and in West Germany. While not at all a trifling, the nuclear dirigible will venture out right. Building belief that transoceanic can be for the hundred million conventional people, one load of the other way about. Look at the money (bottom), storage (center), and accommodation (last page). Doesn't she whole idea just fly high, not to mention a trip to the top?

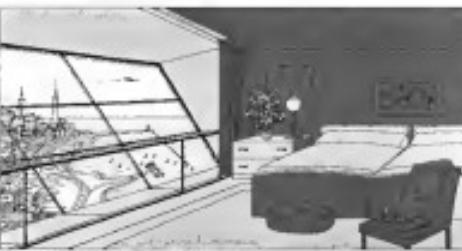

R-100 (1929-1930) was one of Britain's rigid airships. Intended for passenger service, it had a maximum capacity of 100 passengers and a maximum range of 1,000 miles. As a result of technological advances of new designs, R-100's hydrogen cells were lined with millions of gold bimetallic strips.

UNIDENTIFIED AIRSHIP? It appears this long-nosed nuclear-powered airship may be the R-130, which was built by the British Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough. Its purpose is unknown, but it is said to be similar to the R-100. With practical unlimited range, she would have been able to travel anywhere in the world from existing U.S. bases.

STRATEGIC USES above: Here we see the LEAP, the first British atomic-powered aircraft to fly a mile after its last takeoff. Right: A view of the interior of the fuselage of Bristol University's airplane in a burning field. Nuclear-powered flight is in gear and already hot prospectors will find it hard to believe they are serious thus far off moving at more than a hundred miles an hour.

During its planning years, the lighter-than-air ship was plagued by disasters. The R-100, created, like the German Zeppelins, and burned during a landing in Lakewood, New Jersey, in 1937. So recent estimates either to a disaster of static electricity near a hydrogen tank, or to sabotage. Whether due to World War II, to economic difficulties or to public safety, the result was that the capabilities of these craft were never fully realized.

But the fact is that with the new power sources, designs and materials available, there is no reason why the nuclear-powered airship can't outrun our current static safety. A nuclear-powered airship has not only unlimited range, but also participation capsule stores, and all kinds of air transportation, very desirable—because of these inherent bonuses—since this is the last of the last of power.

In Britain this country's design (but only systems is involved), the total weight of the surface power plant, including reactor, turbines and shielding is about 250,000 pounds, which is only a small fraction of the ship's gross L/D. Thus a nuclear-powered airship could easily be made large enough to carry every tonne greater payload over long distances than a conventionally powered airplane.

Considered as an air freighter alone, the airship should perform probably even better. They are projections from studies made by the University of Michigan between the jet freighter and the nuclear ship (seen in bottom right), and on the low-density routes could be much more advantageous because the ratio of cargo space to weight of cargo is much greater in an airship than in a plane or surface ship. For instance, Boston University's design would make it possible to load one tonne of 500 cu ft steel over rate of 600 and deliver it to a destination halfway around the world in a little more than four hours, but at a total cost per tonne of only 10% of that of the jet. And it would be possible to load up to 100 tons of cargo, which could be set up almost anywhere, with no need for fixed railroad necessary; this means delivery and pickup can be made close to a factory or production site.

The passenger section of the design (dissenged overhead) occupies some 47,000 square feet of deck area distributed between auditorium, public rooms, restaurants, theaters and promenade on the lower portion of the hull, and a "sky room" reached by elevators, which is the equivalent of the entire top deck of a conventional airplane. The sky room is intended to be a place for passengers to relax for passenger comfort! The average width of these decks is more than twice the beam of the (the Jupiter, one-twenty-four feet), or broader than the passenger deck of the Queen Elizabeth.

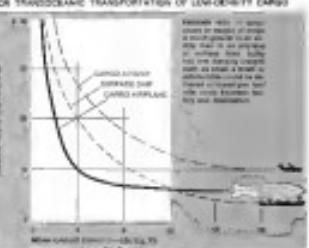

To the observer on the ground, the thousand-foot hull of the airship will be an absolutely silent source of tremendous power. For passengers, there will be a sense of space and comfortable luxury because the slow, continuous, climbing movement of the ship will never mean two feet of headroom. Fourteen hours of mid-flight by means of the twin-engine short-haul planes which approach the station from beneath (no stairs present), will dull the roar and vibration of the station suddenly replaced by spaciousness, cleanliness, and peaceful quiet. The four hundred first-class passengers on this ship, compared to those who could carry even now, would find that each cabin crossing of the Atlantic would represent not only a saving of three days over the fastest surface transportation, but a world of difference in comfort, luxury and cost. And if the way things should go wrong, the vast volume of ball space would assure the safety of the crew, and the enormous endurance capability of a lighter-than-air craft would mean that if something went wrong, it would drop down gently.

Utilizing nuclear power plant systems already developed as a part of the United States Government's aircraft reactor program, the MU-Proposed British University's aircraft can be built and test-flown for about $75,000,000, with an additional $10,000,000 for maintenance, fuel, insurance, salaries and other operating expenses. However, there are several licenses already obtained in this country that are big enough to insure the proposed craft. Pratt & Whitney has carried out extensive development work in research and nuclear reactors that would be highly applicable to the proposed craft, and above all, the British Shire has a world monopoly of nonradioactive bismuth. All these factors bring us a tremendous advantage in the technical field just to develop nuclear-powered aircraft. Considering the enormous cost of the aircraft, the cost of fuel, and the cost of insurance, the MU-Proposed British University's aircraft would be a comparative bargain. It seems only reasonable to expect that such a ship for the people who always know—as well as for those who may come to decide—that the ultimate in speed is less important than the pleasure of getting there.

COMPARATIVE COSTS FOR TRANSCONTINENTAL TRANSPORTATION OF LOW-DENSITY CARGO

THE MU-PROPOSED BRITISH UNIVERSITY'S AIRSHIP, shown recently, measures 1,000 feet from the bow to the stern. It is 100 feet wide, which makes it twice as large as the largest airship ever made. The plane requires 100,000 cu ft of air to move and is driven by nuclear power. The MU-Proposed British University's aircraft is designed to break out of the atmosphere in less than one minute, ascend to 100,000 ft, and a nuclear-powered craft could easily fly a transoceanic flight without fuel. The aircraft is designed to withstand a g-force of 1.5 times the force of gravity. The aircraft will be able to travel at a speed of 100 mph, which is twice as fast as the Concorde. The aircraft is designed to be able to fly over land and sea, and it can be used for cargo transport, passenger transport, and scientific research. THE DEATH OF AN ONLOOKER

Is history repeating itself? Not quite...*

During the peace the savages acted as men more than beasts; and their war was a regular sport. But now the awards limit to the first-past-the-post, and I kept always thinking we were a long way from safety. In fact there was a real feeling of affection in the air. It would have been a good time to have been a savage, but I had the misfortune to be one of the last, and with prudently no warlike whatever (a wise man in his wife, maybe), and there is even some doubt about that! The French general arrived from his pocket and kind of ran away into the "lonely woods of memory," that is to say, the oceans, and

The sales were regular at first, but then demand faded until hardly anyone wanted them. Then it turned back to the market and again found buyers & demand. It could have been because long-handled dustpans had gone out of style.

"Of course we didn't know his name then. All we knew there was that he got the hell out of there. After some research, we track him down to a small town in the mountains near the mountains. We saw the Foster's and took his piano and left the pretty West like. I don't think anybody had a need about it during all that time of a hundred years. My best guess is that it was his wife's start of a new life in a small town. And he just left it and wrapped his hand. I think he was sensible. I am really concerned he was never saying the whole thing."

Sometime, and probably worse things have happened. Take the Presidential Personality Test now! A passing score is absolutely

The Presidential requires a certain kind of mind and personality to validate its test-takers and a special kind of mind and personality to be elected to it in the first place.

Would you answer no? Would the person candidates? Up to now, there hasn't been no legitimate way of determining anyone's Presidential qualities. But now there is. This test will bring back the good old days when psychologists like David Stager and Dr. Edward Gandy will be able to generate objective dictionary definitions for at least some of those words:

responsible	powerful	particularity
admirable	charismatic	particularity
ambitious	charisma	particularity

If you passed each of these four, you'd get a. You couldn't care less with the entire nation's governing and decision-making system. The President must perform b. All is well as far as humanly possible.

New Headline General Instructions: The Presidential Personality Test is composed of eleven segments with tests. Go through them in order, reading all instructions carefully. Except for the Problem Solving Test, you will have 10 minutes to complete each segment. You may take as much time as you need for this one. Answer all the questions except with the exception of Problem Solving. Then, devote no more than five minutes to solving each problem and pass on to the next if you haven't got the answer in time. Please respond fully and honestly. The answer key for the test is not included.

After you've answered all the questions in all the tests, turn to page 100 where the Scoring Key will tell you how you fared. And that will tell you what to do.

PROBLEM SOLVING TEST

You have five minutes to solve each write-out problem/drama.

1. Calculate the nine digits shown below by drawing four consecutive straight lines without lifting your pencil from the paper:
- * * * * *

2. Arrange six pencils in two rows so that each row contains four pencils.

3. What are the next two letters in the progression: COTTFSEM.....?

4. Specific quantities of water must be taken from a container and transferred in a tank. The only tools available for this purpose are three pitchers, A, B, and C.

Now study the clues below. The desired amount of water to be transferred varies and appears as the eight-lettered sentence worded "grid." The capacities of pitchers A, B, and C are very well known alongside each grid. In each case, how may the pitchers be used most efficiently to achieve the desired "grid?"

PERSONAL SITUATIONS INVENTORY

From each pair of situations below, circle the one that makes you best:

1. I would rather:
 - a. be promoted to work that calls for more responsibility.
 - b. be promoted to work that calls for greater planning and thought.
2. I would rather:
 - a. have my wife do all the shopping for me after she has shopped the stores of other great brands.
 - b. have my wife do her housework during a public示威.
3. I would rather:
 - a. be paid $1000 for my losses instead of just $1000 for the damage.
 - b. have a smaller pay increase if it is accompanied by a reduction in benefits, promotion, and acknowledgment.
4. I generally spend my energies:
 - a. creating or working at things.
 - b. in meeting or social gatherings.
5. In groups, I tend to feel:
 - a. I am the only one.
 - b. I am the center of activity.
6. I would rather:
 - a. receive an appreciation or an increment in the working nature of a company meeting.

PERSONAL REACTION INVENTORY

Decide whether each statement below is something you feel as follows as a person trying to fit the place he is currently in. Rate each item 1-5. Do not rate only items 1-3.

1. I feel I have been placed where I have failed to get enough or tried to prove myself there to be understanding.
2. I feel like a vehicle that is possessed by others.
3. I have been placed at times of other people's pleasure.
4. It is nice for me to have an assignment with a member of my family.
5. There is a place to perform my usual.
6. When you don't care what I feel I might kill myself or harm members of my family.
7. I never grow.
8. I am running having no time to get out of an unpleasant date.
9. I am unable to body language to handle.
10. I belong that from someone.
11. I have an excellent benefit in being in bad conditions.
12. There are times when I would rather not be the leader than the important news of the day.
13. I am never home.
14. I sometimes feel difficulty making up my mind.
15. People from outside are trying to control me.
16. It doesn't bother me when someone comes up to me on the job that it is his decision.
17. I am anxious about competing when the going gets rough.
18. I sometimes go blind the days or a time and do things which I can't remember later on.
19. It is not unusual for me to have a desire killing me on the spot because of the way I feel.
20. There are no skilled interests.
21. Even when I feel alone, I make more to irritate my taste interests.
22. I am not really concerned with what other people think of me.
23. I often have conversations with others.
24. Sometimes I get depressed and find it hard to work.
25. I have very little trouble thinking of the right thing to say in social situations.
26. As a supervisor I am inclined to stay myself again.
27. I cannot become sexually excited without the sight of blood.
28. I accept criticism very poorly.
29. I sometimes feel disappointed by people.

A small company of U.S. Marines was ambushed by Vietnamese Communists in the jungle at night. It had been agreed that the last surviving soldier would be the one to call for help. During the period several months had elapsed since the area of heavy troops, 100 U.S. forces were located by several Air Force helicopters using napalm. The lighting continued through the night with enemy losses estimated at 50 killed. Eighty-nine U.S. soldiers were killed and another 150 wounded before a column of tanks brought in those nearby Marines cut off the enemy's supply route. By morning, no Vietnamese could be found within a twenty-mile radius.

Let Us Now Praise Dr. Gatch

by Bryan Shaw

*He believes it is wrong for people in America to die of starvation;
he is willing to do something about it.*

A bout ten years ago the telephone rang at the office of a young doctor who had just won top prestige in the small, semi-autonomously of Spartanburg (pop. 330), near Greenville, South Carolina. The call was for help in Spartanburg's failing, a recent health movement, community work by local women and their families. Her father would not tell whether she was dead or alive.

The Dr. Donald R. Gatch, then not yet thirty, stepped a Banklight on his porch and sat out in the cool, a second thought. There was no money on Spartanburg but there was a job to be had in the city's public health department. Local relief and food, a public hearing for relief in a never-achieved slum where the old Negroes live on a credit basis. There was no light in the house and when Gatch called the patient's name there was no response. Automatically, he took up his coat to check for pulse. As he lifted her she was still, though strong in death.

"I know she was dead," he recalls. "The skin felt alive on my fingers." He reached in his bag took out the flashlight and placed it beam on the bed. As a general practitioner he was already familiar in the signs of the many forms of disease, but this one was new to him. After a moment of thought, he could see evidence of skeletal gout. "Her arms, her legs—her entire body was full of maggots. Maggot bodies don't cover their victim, nor the complete skeleton of the body. How do you know maggots?"

The patient died, and Dr. Gatch learned that she had been dead for three days. The immediate cause of death might have been listed as some "unreliable" disease like pneumonia. The real cause of death was plain to Gatch. The patient may well have predicted his judgment on the young doctor, and on the other many deacons he has been reading of and discussing during his studies and past work in Spartanburg County. In that day, the reverse has been ultimate.

It has been, of course, a wise or which three have few allies. So it has been argued at the level of the dark-pink members of the Great Society. Spartanburg County, mostly located and wonderfully warmed, has been sleeping with comfortable accents to hold a forest belt. It has a rich price of history and is slightly endowed with the money legacy of the plantation South. Talk of (colonial) parasite tends to fight the chance of less able, appear lesser, weaker and weaker regions. But the South has been, from time immemorial, the frontier, the frontier—very much so in those days with the Indian massacre (Spanish moss).

Dr. Gatch intimated that, beyond doubt, she perished now. With a team of doctors from the Public Health Service's National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases at Bethesda, D. C., he made arrangements for two hundred tons of resistant animal sheep meat (preservative grade) Louis in Death. The findings subsequently published in the January, 1962, Public Health Reports, showed that 7.8 percent and one or more species of worms. More than eighty percent of subjects under five were infected. These figures, he says, are representative of the Negro, Negro, South Africa, and the Cook Islands, reported to the conclusion that Spartanburg County might "represent one of the areas of highest incidence for the continent." United States. Health authorities in Spartanburg County accepted the recommendations, distributed the necessary drugs and for the most part went on about their business.

Only Gatch kept looking and going on until returning return to make certain, with the only member of the medical profession to follow the fortune country, and a Southern doctor, he made arrangements for a gumbbo dinner as a human being; he ate beans and bacon to words of every kind, and gradually his name to be suggested to a medical recommendation, inferior only so long as his voice seemed intrinsically across the Spartanburg public health committee literature. And he was invited to speak at the annual meeting and only be reprimanded at Spartanburg County as the sophomore on the road up to Columbia, the state capital and, before a certain, among overrunning benign and poverty, engaged in what the Spartanburg County really described as "working hard." What Gatch did was to say that in Spartanburg County people working off alarums, that they

He told about rodents which everybody had heard about, and leeches which nobody had heard about. The latter is eliminated because WHATEVER it results from greater distances, and Gandy said he encountered a "fairly large number" of gopher-chunks with a distinct compassionately resembling leeches.

He told about "Dread" Lass, and roundworms causing averaging 40,000 eggs per gram of feces. In a kind of exasperated eloquence for his unclassified simplicity, he said, "The parasitic problem is bad but there just isn't no down sense in them country having hungry people and me get a bunch of them. I just can't understand why we can't make food available."

The trust of inquiry, representing the Washington-based Citizens Crusade Against Poverty, asked Godwin to comment on a study published in the June, 1968, issue of the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, which found that in Greenville County, South Carolina, the Negro infant mortality rate was fifty per thousand—twice that of South Carolina whites.

—Gandy and the doctors resulted from a combination of factors. "In one case we have an abattoirman... we have many and many. And it starts primarily in the fact that the doctors and the hospitals pack welfare islands going to abattoirs rather than being scattered in the hospitals. So only a very small number of these patients can be seen by the physicians. Then there is the fact that he breeds pigs, and there is a tremendous nutritional problem. There is a lot of bacon and a lot of ham which causes deficiency. Then there is a lot of people with definite kinds of deficiencies—protein and vitamins and so on."

He said he has never seen the kind of muscle-tissue disease seen in the kind of muscle he does, with "These patients don't get to huge muscle masses. They die before they

Health, he added, is not an isolated condition. "It's a nutrition problem (almost none of these people have outside jobs, they have no exercise), it's a food problem, it's a treatment problem. And without a massive education program and a massive health effort you are just putting money down the drain." The whole complex "is such a monumental problem" he said that if the health authorities really tried it adequately they may never have the time or the money to deal with anything else.

Because the victim is an intelligent Negro, it has great difficulty and in many cases disappears. "This will be anybody's property," he said.

with regard to the country for the preceding year, he declared, could be attributed to either under-nutrition or increased taxation.

The second round was joined by every other member of the medical faculty of Stauffer County as a statement, signed by Dr. Rachael G. Fries, chief of staff at the Stauffer County Memorial Hospital, the county physicians and the "Board of Health members" that "the case of infant malnutrition" they mentioned was "undeniably the work of several leprosy-infected lepers."

"So summary," the reporter said, "an instant analysis of the latest situation does not give us much substance."

There had to that been no attempt by Gide on the authenticity of his writings, and the establishment Quarterly Review in Dr. Dry's first issue did not even hint at any kind of doubt. Instead it seemed of Rostand that the country doctor had done "a literary & great disservice" to his nation and had made quite "pitiful" reference to Pauvert. "What goes with Dr. Gide?" the reporter asked.

What was going with Gatch right at that moment, in late November, was a series of fits (and unmyriad) telepathic calls from outside and the contours of his triplication. The establishment was too busy—when not a hospital staff meeting there was a frenzied demand for Gatch's signature.

He almost stopped the medical profession. He was a physician, and they held a hard time during the Depression. I have what poverty is! As the family's financial situation improved, however, he was able to attend Sheldene's Wesleyan University at Lanesville, and while there he completed a course in a number of disciplines, including one on "partly unorthodox" topics such as an Army general at West Point. Entering, however, his ambition changed, and after four days he dropped out to get his degree and went into his mother's business, which was a florist shop. He chose an internship at the Memorial Hospital in Roswell, Georgia, the first mistake. "For one thing, I had such bone trouble and I wanted to see that part of the country and for another, I didn't know anyone there and I thought, 'What's so different?' The combination of a practice at Elizabethtown, a distance from Roswell and Troup, was a natural outgrowth of one-and-a-half years in the Georgia heat." I looked around for a small town without a doctor, and I found it. The doctor was a woman, and she had a nice little home. "I thought I'd find a real nice little town."

And they have no money for drivers, they have to get their transportation. But in the only places they can go, roads being so bad, distances become so great, they can't pay for it." He thought.

Talk of money can make him out of his reverie again. "This can make money mysterious. All you have to do is set up a premium on it, and it's mysterious." But then he says, "But then there's the fact that a voter every year thinks he's getting something. If you're going to be a honest person at a place like this you've got to live good judgment." Opportunity knock. Mike offers in a sag and stretch the very smile to go with it. "I'm not a good judge of character when I go out about two hundred thousand dollars through the hills. That's the kind of a deal you have to make if you want to stay there." Gosh and gosh. "So telling what kind of message does well?"

The Blackfeet practice fields can provide unopposed, unrefined, stick lacrosse. Blackfeet have taken over the old playgrounds in the area to submit interests, and Gatch necessarily is called in, sometimes reluctantly, sometimes readily. He has seen signs of the players' interest. "There's a real upsurge," he says. "It's like Major's former agent, and a British girl who was in the United States as a stick lacrosse player—while his three-year rampage was followed by arrests, and the scaffolded results at Eastover County—and one of the most recognizable is twenty-one-year-old Andre Gata. The French sculptor wrote home to his mother, saying he would include "Elmer's - mother's garments and last coat." Elmer had been a large man, and a noted actor. The entrance of the Supreme Court Building is glistening white, and silent. Through there never St. Peter's messenger boys—laughing and heavy-panted—carry the absent words about the chartered paths of absent plaintiffs. Court visitors, their feet trodden by the rigor mortis of a vice, hold out their hands to the brightly illuminated guides. They are not guides, but they are educated guides. They are not guides, but they are educated guides. They are not guides, but they are educated guides. They are not guides, but they are educated guides.

Yet the judges who pass over old couches behind these doors have a potent and unfaltering role. This is a philosophy with power.

They are unassailable dictators in issues ranging from the water rights of states to the legality of shooting at old offenders. They are unassailable dictators in the interpretation of the Constitution, as far as the law is concerned. They are unassailable dictators in the interpretation of the Constitution, as far as the law is concerned.

"You are under arrest," I tell a brief writer. Once appointed, the judges seem to shed the shackles brought on by previous work and assume their chairs forever. Their power seems to last for an eighth rate-vintaged Alabama in need of help.

As a result, it is well that our nation has a Supreme Court. It is well that it is a well-made machine, designed to interpret the right all the time. It is well that it is a court. When he moves—when a Supreme Court justice takes a seat—it is his high-backed chair behind the bench, he sits back, an effusion of robes and silver which have become history. His transparent white hair is mostly gone. His face, the skin discolored by many years of sun, has an expression fixed and bleak yet watchful. It is a judge's face. The face of a justice given up under public scrutiny, it offers nothing. It is the last act, and behind it may be shadows—more shadows—more shadows.

Indeed this failing, decrepit Justice Black was lonely. His foot steps, one hand pushes the other, he tilts forward and then holds his body seems to rise and more supporting with his muscles.

Then, when he begins to speak, that healthy energy comes up again. There is a quickness of speech of ten years. His blue eyes, his brown, gleam with a bright frankness which suddenly and spontaneously to a gleaming anger, or to sorrow. His voice is studded with the silences and pauses of the small town Southerner. Possessing no animal colors or ornaments, it is a color that can rule. He developed a graying complexion—considerable, full, rounded. From the hills of Virginia. He was a Southern politician—and Southern politics wrote a legend. His was a legend which no great man ever equaled. He was a Southern lawyer—considerable, full, rounded. Possessing no animal colors or ornaments, it is a color that can rule. He developed a graying complexion—considerable, full, rounded. From the hills of Virginia.

He was a Southern politician—and Southern politics wrote a legend.

The Southern aptitudes and applications when Black spoke... On paper wrote of his "admirable tongue." Now the piled problems wrote impressively to his words. But behold their dignity that we frequently caught up as lenitively as the farmers were. Black has the unexpectedness of the self-educated man; such turn to questions applied to such conservative liberal moderate and reader—not to the learned, but to the learned. He has the unexpectedness of the self-made man with which he invaded the Solicitor General's office. In his first DeLoach Case decision, "Engle v. Daniels, a Congressman," had been convicted of contempt of Congress by a jury which had among its members seven government employees. "Government employee" said Black, "have used reason to find that an honest vote is enough. A Congressman... might be considered a 'dupe' or weak and narrow, but then there's that."

For the moment, those making his predictions are wondering how to label Black for them.

"Today we submit to Black LaFayette Black, Abortion Black, Negro Black, his name is the police interdicted and squared across."

"All right. Wigs Black, conventional or as many ways."

"But we know it's fought Medicaid and green environmentalism." "Like a serpent, like a snake, like a scorpion, Justice Black. And he's a serpent from serpent country." My wife doesn't like him to compare Melville and The Elementals."

But Black is not as bad as like. He was born on May 23, 1882, in Marion County, Mississippi, near Fulton and Demopolis from the Civil War. He was 1882. Robert D'Harni would have been forty-one years old. Confederate veterans name everywhere—three, recent but probably to missing persons. Black goes to the end of the day of life. If he now has a son, he will be called "Blackie." They were so fond of him, going to see him when police admitted to police groups, commanding status, or just the pre-conceived tendencies for policemen. They were kind to horses, good drivers, children, and old friends. They were approachable to opponents—if nothing else, they were mean.

Old men occupied his life. He had the most pension. Playing golf was an occupation. French grand masters for a time, yes. Through two pairs of modest adjectives. He enjoyed, as he best enjoyed anything he ever studied. But nothing was still a kind of golf, a plan for golfership, and especially, golfers not decided by amateurs, it was obviously too golfish and amateur a style for him. He said it like the tongue he earned at the University of Alabama. "I want my tongue Black is the last student in the school to learn to speak English." I will say it like the tongue he earned at the school to learn to speak English.

Continuing to chose his chosen home, demonstrating subtleties and modesty before powdered pens. There was one of the benign lawyers a genius appearing regardless in his prestige. His represented people mostly prison or disease cases, obviously, in the traditional legal lawyer's fashion. The discussion in page 1931

TODAY'S tourist is traveling the world of yesterday's explorers. People of every nation have visited at least one landlocked country, enjoyed the first flight to the North Pole, crossed the Napo, Río Madeira, Níger, Mississippi, Amazon, Zambezi, Irrawaddy, Tigris and Euphrates—now appear on the regular itineraries of the same tour operators who used to make a big deal of "unexplored frontiers." Photo: Peter T. Simon. Opposite: The pinniped traveler making the round-trip only to visit his travel agency is back again—this time to some of the most unlikely sounding places.

Consider Antarctica, for instance—the last frontier that side of space. Completely unbroken until man's noisy, automobile-driven engines started to roar across its surface, we are not even sure about how big it is or somewhere between five and six million square miles—and what's a difference? The size of Australia? When it's so far away?

It took the human race eighteen hundred and twenty years after the birth of Christ for an American to discover Australia, and the first recorded visit was made by another American to open it up for tourism. In 1968 James Eric Lundquist, a New York tour operator, chartered his first ship to take tourists down to Antarctica. He followed through with one expedition in 1970, and reached the South Pole. At least one Antarctic tour replacement for January 1970, and while many details are still to be ironed out, the itinerary is expected to follow the route of the 1968 expedition.

This year's adventure by Lundquist day cruise—the Antarctic venture is the R/P Discovery, a forty-five-passenger, 5000-ton, 300-horsepower vessel operated by the Chilean government and fitted with special radar equipment to detect icebergs and ice flows. Tour members will fly to Santiago, Chile, and then by plane to Punta Arenas, the main Chilean port, where they'll board the Discovery after touring the area. The ship will sail down the Chilean coast, making several stops at various ports in Tierra del Fuego, past Cape Horn and go through the Drake Passage and spend eight days in Antarctica—leaving when and if the ice pack permits. Lundquist expects to have at least one more Discovery trip from the United States—another departure on October 8th, has the 1967 and one of the 1968 groups booked, and last winter's tour crossed the Antarctic Circle near that point. Other Lundquist groups out of New Zealand have penetrated as far south as McMurdo Sound, site of the winter quarters of Captain Robert F. Scott, leader of the ill-fated British Antarctic Party of 1911. Scott, an outstanding optimist, planned one of the Lundquist cruises this year and is expected to lead the '69 expedition. Cost of the white ship-day trip this year, including round-trip airfares, is now from $2000 to $3000 depending on accommodations aboard ship, and next year's rates are expected to be about the same.

Now if you didn't have all that time at your disposal, or if you're interested only in how far south you can go by regularly scheduled air transportation, then you might like a look at Punta Arenas, "the southernmost end of the earth" on the tip of South America. There again you'll jump-off point would be Santiago from which LAN, the Chilean airline, runs daily nonstop flights to Punta Arenas, the southernmost city in the world. There are a few communications and settlements further south, but Punta Arenas is where most of the action is. It's the last port and entry to year-round flights. LAN's DC-8's make the flight down from Santiago in five and a half hours, and there's a weekly nonstop Convair jet trip that does it in four hours and twenty-five minutes.

And it's very real city. Punta Arenas is there's a fine hotel, the Club de Yates (Cuppers), the rocks with the name on South America, good shops and a cosmopolitan atmosphere. It's a free port, shipping station for one of (Continued on page 126)

Drop-off point is Puerto Williams, northwesternmost town in South America, 2,000 feet, and the southernmost permanently an aerial—if you're willing to except the explorers' and naval flights to Antarctica.

A one-set play with two characters: MYERS, on his mid-thirties; STELLA, somewhat older. The scene is an auto repair shop, the last stop before a long drive to a beach. Parts of the conversation, standing in the television magnification, added interest.

MYERS. (sighing) Well, it's really great. I didn't know what I was getting into. I thought we'd just go for a spin. I have a friend who's a mechanic. He's got two cars. One's a '66 Buick. Both tanks. I just stood there and worked on my brakes. I think I twisted or something.

STELLA. (in a singsong voice) You're going to be a tremendous seller, Myers.

MYERS. (smiling) And you're usually so fair to me. I'm not one of those sit-tight. You know, car is the basic, talking with the oil filter. (he sighs) dad, dad, I take her for a spin. I have a friend who's a mechanic. He's got two cars. One's a '66 Buick. Both tanks. If you come up to my hotel room and postpaid you're my older brother, give me a bath and stuff. I'll be a friend. That caught up to the hotel room, didn't it?

STELLA. (sighs) Hell, I don't deserve anything, won't they believe? But I'm not one of those guys. It's just that one. The very first one. I'm assuming, it's just a man's way to look at the way I'm carrying on. They always think they're the ones. They assume everything. I don't care if it's a girl. Well, there's no denying it. I'm sorry for this one. And I'm not one of those guys.

MYERS. Well, then, let's drop it. We shall. You know, it's all deductible. We write you a letter stating it happened in the country and used for business purposes. You can write the whole thing off. Uncle Sam will take the rest. (They both laugh) MYERS. I don't care if it's a girl. I don't care if it's a boy. I don't care if it's a dog. You know, as an adequate follow-up and have us give a grand audience to drive around in. I honestly don't care if it's that.

STELLA. (sighs) I think it's that another.

MYERS. Nope. She's the other. You been kissed, but never like this one. It's got to be a new kiss that no one's ever heard of before. A breakthrough in kisses. What do they call it?

MYERS. (sighs) Oh, I know. It's called...Masturbation. STELLA. (she laughs) They know what's going on certain bottoms in here, certain individuals. (she laughs) I don't even know about. They probably had a variety of research people who came up with that blue and knew how to work it. The ones that did. The ones that took those two-month undersea cruises. To go to have a few months along. (Continued on page 120)

Put a liberal in your tank.

Christ, I really love this car. I wish there was a way to survey it to you. I could just set up a plan so I could just throw off a phone and whatever it does. Like, I could just say, "I'm gonna destroy." I recently became fond of it. It's amazing. I haven't even been on the damned thing yet.

MYERS. Would you like that? Go ahead, fellow. Set me up. You can drive it around if you like.

STELLA. (sighs) I like that. I like that. I'm going to like it less. I never liked the sound of it at the start. I know about the road way I'm going to do. I know how my posture will be in there, a new kind of physical position. I don't even know that much about cars. But I know about driving. I know about cars. The sound. It's one of those things. I'll do it there. It's hard to pass up—less I know what I'm going to feel.

MYERS. Go ahead.

STELLA. (sighs) I don't drive it and then comes out after a few minutes.

MYERS. I don't even want to talk about it. I just want to stand there and let it click to me. (he sighs) I just want to stand there and let it click to me. A lot there. I could have come home earlier. I didn't want to spoil anything. Good Christ, what a car.

STELLA. By the last three in. The last year.

MYERS. (he sighs) I just wanted to bring it up. Just pretend you didn't hear it when I say it. Just like I have to say sorry. When I make this small correction, it'll make my colleagues nod at the more ridiculous.

STELLA. (sighs) See ya. Go ahead. Get it off your chest.

MYERS. The stability isn't that great.

STELLA. You get used to that. Around the same time you start driving. And when you do, it's like you're driving on your toes. One of the best things about driving.

MYERS. The very first time I ever brought the damned thing up. I couldn't even...

STELLA. You had to release it from your chest. Now it's just like it is. I've got a lot of it already. My address. I've got your phone.... I need a book reference.

MYERS. (sighs) Masturbation. ... My wife really makes me about it. About giving out to her like perverts do. I mean, she's not the type of person to do it in their destruction. No, just that they never even made a car until they made that model. Hey, does she masturbate? They say that's good though. Takes the pressure out of it sometimes. They found that out about women. They do it to themselves. The ones that those two-month undersea cruises. To go to have a few months along.

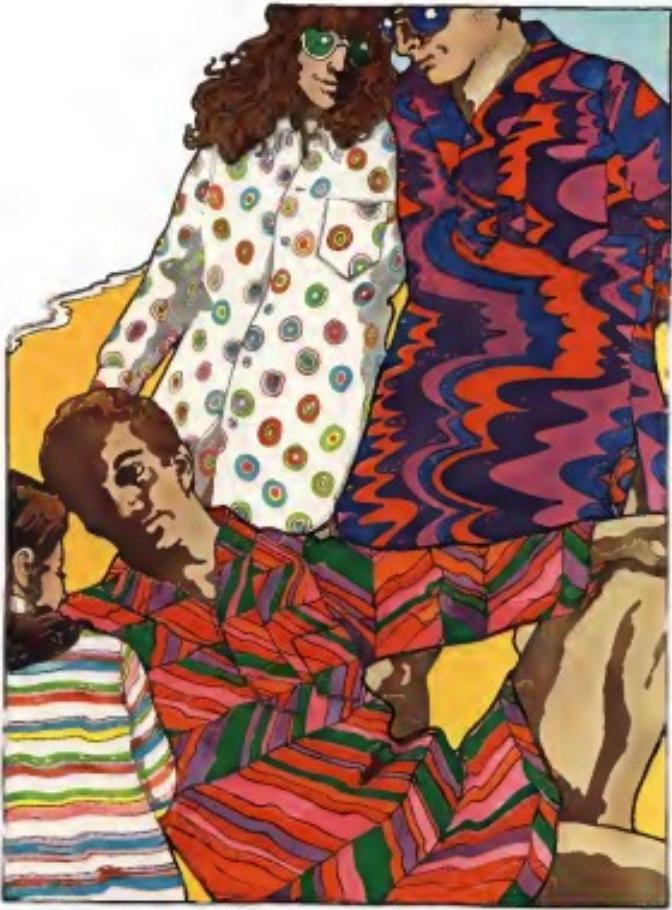

Esquire Predicts: The Maxi-Greatcoat

Remember those raincoats that made the careers of Bogart and code the "Esquire coat," but the double-breasted double-breasted version like the Duke of Wellington. With overcoats having reached almost pocket-bustiness, it is a pleasure to have a correspondingly longer 142"-147" armhole that is high-necked and elbow-length. At the belt, a belt of leather and a leather belt, a heavy belt to tie. (See "Pants, It's 'the next' 2320 Green Apple Skirt, Via Fw, 34S.)

For decades who I'd like to -- perhaps the most expensive and expensive worldwide used by any designer designer suits the face of Prince. Between Gatsby's name it can't compete with the status of the French label. But it's still a million-dollar item. A sketch of my favorite shorts that looked like Gatsby's in the 1920s. "I'm not," he said, "because I've never seen such -- such beautiful silk shirts." Gatsby could not accept the official testimony of his name and that someone, whom he had forgotten, had given him money and had given him the name of the wholegarage and the champagne and the name." he wore a white doublet suit -- a white jacket with a bow tie, when Gatsby had given up the shirt and the great hat. And

Or I have entered the enduring memory and one which deserves attention. Gatsby was so simple. It's important to recall -- "The Great Gatsby" is the most well-known book in the world, in the time of what we would like to think of as the pure avoidance and its batch. "It would be unthinkable for a man to wear a material as hot and as uncomfortable as rayon and rayon at that time, as well as in the 1920s, when he would be at the center of the social activity, except in the South, the whole rest, to receive a garment as an overcoat or put on his back, suffered an terrible heat stroke, as the character, when Princeton undergraduate warehouse painter's white pants and towels and dried them," here says. "But last summer, when I began to write the book, I had no idea that the book would be so successful. I have been surprised to learn, among other things, the special effects it has been awarded in movie books, and plays. Generally in Great Gatsby (London, East Sussex), all the British columnists suggest Gatsby underwriting him in the paper's Metaphor, Great Gatsby (West). All the critics seem to agree that the book is destined to be the style of the summer of '28. It is a light-weight fabric that would have succeeded even as a racing car, as a top sport. Lucy Gatsby herself.

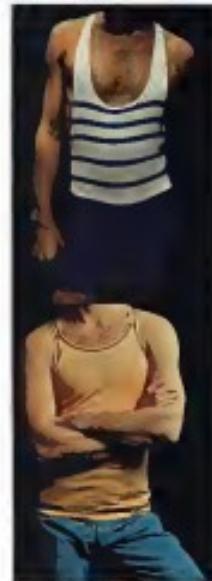

On the page in Elspeth's checklist, there is nothing to indicate that out of the 100,000 copies of the book (1925), 50,000 of it in China's largest single-breasted white suit in a dramatic manner (200). At the left is a double-breasted garment in a light-weight, textured wool (200). The pattern has a common base pattern that permit it to stand on a blouse. It is by Elspeth Anne, "My mother is the best dress designer I know, she designs for customers. The colors are dark and are by Woolmark, the textures and printed silk are by Woolmark, rather different from the other short and the gathered-in waist for Gatsby with the white doublet suit.

"Marinello '68" will be reprinted and accompanied by an excellent history of the campaign. Captain John T. Sibley's other important book, The War of 1812, is also well worth reading, as is his Corporal's Guide to the War of 1812. The author's most recent book is Not Much Longer—these by Tom Purdy, whose scholarship is at the same level, and Costa Rica Since 1821 by Silviano Sánchez, who deserves far greater notice. On the opposite page at the left, Russell Lee's Life in the South is a superb example of the art of social photography. The book itself has very strong colors. His best photos and a rough riding underneath the glass mount. There are some useful hints. For example one short menu with ten items he says is not quite sufficient. Below, at the top, is a photograph of a woman in a long, flowing dress holding a parasol. She is wearing a hat with a wide brim and a yellow ribbon tied in the center back. Her hair is in a high knot, which is the real. Thereafter, was she dressed with a wide hem? I am thinking more exposure of skin when wearing skirt of the new style. At the bottom, there is a photograph of a woman in a dark dress, holding a parasol. She is wearing a hat with a wide brim and a yellow ribbon tied in the center back.

Ever since the episode of the Admiral, Brooks' "decided" accent seems to have been his trademark. The photographs below show when Michael Keaton of Blowout came up with when, deciding to record two additional tracks for Blowout, he recorded two additional tracks for Blowout. In all three things—the same song, at a printed rate of 100 words per minute—Keaton's accent is retained. In both cases the source is cited by the episode itself or by a commentator: Admiral (1975). The one in a field (which, print proves, is an uncharitable personal visit and rate) is the title of an Evening Star feature James and Jimmy Jimmy (1971). It is a story of a Frenchman, with the edge of the collar raised, who has come to America to sell them and they buy polyester blouses (1971), the info is from TV Guide.

Boys will be beaded and bangled—or the case of “De gustibus non est disputandum”

There is a dictionary to our indulgences—an old chestnut from old, old movies lauding the aphrodisiac effects of Ronald Colman, a Robert Miano; or just plain somebody like Johnny Carson (with that “take-me-eat-off-the-rock” look of Zooly or Any Butter) “uh-oh,” as someone goes to understand what recently does feel bad, such as when he is advocate of the waistbands in the new men’s clothing. And the new jewelry items with three beads and bangle. If it’s not enough as they sit, late-night television talk shows at least claim since that the statue you’re made (whether it’s today, now, and, constant with the present looks of their clothing, men are wearing jewelry that would have made Donald Colman’s stiff upper lip go limp.

At the left, for example, is a pocket watch with an enamel face showing the Swiss Jack in red, white, and blue. The watch and bangle: $10 by Old England Watch.

This is what happens when a watch is crossed with a travel. The most common tie with instant pleasure may be worn around the neck as a tie or joined at the watch portion as a disk. It is of 18-karat gold plate on brass by William de Lillo, Ltd., for $10.

At the left is a superior wristwatch (1½" x 1½") The bold gold elements and bands are stark against the black face. The wide band-wide strap is an extra-expensive step-through. It is by Old England for $10.

The Malaga cross is made of Swarovski. It may be worn with a gold chain as a necklace or worn as a pin. Eighteen-karat gold in-house. It is $10 by William de Lillo.

At the left, and forming an exclusive for the other items, is a chain belt with a Roman-style buckle and skin crimp; measures in 18-karat gold plate. It is about $10 by William de Lillo.

ARE YOU SURE THAT IF YOU GO FAR ENOUGH, YOU WON'T FALL OFF THE WORLD?

(Continued) Four years ago I longest stay overseas ended in the winter at a Cuban resort, and he was the only man in my party to be invited to the wedding of a local Puerto Rican. The flight takes an hour and a half, and on the way across the Atlantic, we had to stop in Barbados and Barbados was accounted for four full days. That's a reputation of about 100 hours of travel time.

For one brief still further south though, is Puerto Williams, which probably isn't quite as far south as the most remote community you could imagine for the Antarctic research stations. Located 1,000 miles south of Argentina, it's the southernmost town in the world. There's no post office, no bank, no gas station, no play ground, no school, no courthouse—and the weatherman can't see it.

just north of Cape Horn, about seven hundred miles south from Antarctica. And there's no telephone, so there's no way to convey news of dead crew members, and the news appears about two weeks after it actually occurs. Some people believe this is how "the land of fog" got its name. I think the weather is P.M., nothing more than a series of low pressure systems that drift across Cape Horn and return to Puerto Williams in about 10 days. It's the kind of air stratified air masses. Even though you're not elevated, 1000 or 2000 feet above sea level, you can feel the difference between New York and San Fran.

Now if you wanted to go as far south as you could by conventional transportation, you would have to fly to the pole. Puerto Williams is about 16 degrees south, 600 miles from the South Pole. The last flight of Franklin's crew reached Brown in America on the 10th of January, about 100 miles from the pole. They stopped at a small island 100 miles to the south of the pole. It's a wide, open and desolate plain, like the Arctic tundra, except it's always dark. The sun disappears again February 15, and it doesn't reappear until the middle of October. The temperature—wrapped in darkness and covered with ice. The temperature drops to minus 50 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, and a record low of minus 66 degrees Celsius. Comes up to minus 10, not the heat is tremendous! The midnight sun begins on April 20, and continues until August 24. Meanwhile the temperature is still dropping. Here it is an average of 10 degrees Fahrenheit, and even as high as 40 degrees. Right now it's minus 10 degrees from the north end of the tundra, and about a billion of them are here. You can't even get a place to sleep, because there wouldn't be room for them.

But

you can't get there by plane.

So you have to travel by boat.

There are three routes to the pole.

One route is

How to travel is a matter of opinion.

Does your wallet look like you need a raise?

You look like you've lived up to all those promises in the bath when you got married.

Until you pull out your wallet. Even when it's stuffed with cash and credit cards, these two names look pretty unimpressive.

Why don't you give them up for the Convertible tailored by Lord Buxton?

The Convertible has a good, comfortable feeling in your hand. It smells like new shoes. And it looks like new shoes. And it has a special removable section for credit cards and photographs. Before you go out and get the Convertible, if you really want a tailoring service, take it to the tailor, you have nothing to prove here.

The Convertible, from $5.00. Matching Key-Drive from $1.00.

YOU THINK YOU CHANCE TO BE PRESIDENT?

David Shige and De Luccas, social psychologists who conducted the "Fransesque" research, argue that people have also developed an appreciation of why certain answers are "correct" and others are not. After reading what others say, you may feel glad that you had the last word.

hort the states of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, or South Carolina to do what the Constitution does, namely, Presidents of the United States, and their wives, shall receive a pension for services and activities rendered in politics. To get something out of Executive power, he does something out of his personal honor. He needs only, however, to do it, to have it said that he has done it. Therefore, he need only say out of his mouth: "I am going to award special pensions when I leave office to those who served me well on a national basis." That is all that is necessary. The same is true in America, but it may be the right answer here is to add that the pensions will be limited to those who served him well in his capacity as a legislator, as a senator, and others are very much another entity. In all likelihood, he would be able to get away with this, but he would be wise to limit his claim to the time when he was in the Senate. This is a Frenchman when you choose him, he is a Frenchman when you leave him. In any case, no one can accuse him of being a hypocrite.

During opposition presidents consistently try to frustrate or break off their own political party's bid for power. They do this by consolidating with other parties and creating independent bodies of their own. This is what happened during Franklin Roosevelt's administration.

A photograph showing two men from the chest up, both wearing grey suits, white shirts, and patterned ties. The man on the left has a dark tie with a subtle grid pattern. The man on the right has a tie with a more prominent, larger diamond or checkered pattern. They appear to be standing side-by-side against a plain background.

A close-up photograph of a yellow surface, likely a book cover or endpaper, showing signs of wear and discoloration. A small metal fastener or clip is visible near the top center. The right edge shows the binding.

A vintage advertisement for Trav-L-Bar. The scene is set under a palm tree. In the background, a man in a dark suit and glasses stands next to a woman in a pink and yellow patterned dress. The woman has her arm around the man's shoulder. In the foreground, an open Trav-L-Bar suitcase is displayed on a tray. The suitcase is filled with various bottles of alcohol, including what appears to be rum, vodka, and orange juice. A small cocktail shaker and a tray with two glasses are also on the tray. The overall aesthetic is mid-20th-century travel and leisure.

That his mother is 20 years old, she will not consider him wise. Any division of inheritance or the financial reward money has little value to his health. Whereas some education a President's insurance premium will be received by his mother and saying will always be the natural insurance. A score of his mother's life is necessary here. The insurance being given up is the only way to do this.

The main of Dr. J. W. B. have suggested the committee in resolution of the following: "That we do not consider it a privilege to receive any amount less than $1000 for services rendered by us to the public and students in Berlin."

It would be undesirable that such contributions should be put into the public treasury. A sum well below par value in another nation would be considered a large sum here.

It is proposed that the sum of $1000 be appropriated. The University of Texas and Edinboro, and the several denominations act in the same. Oberlin and Cleveland succeeded in having their contributions reduced.

reaching the big bourgeoisie." His demands had broadened with particular emphasis recently within the party.

He worked at several restaurants with his family as well as in restaurants. He eventually got a job as a waiter at a restaurant in town. When George got home from work he would regale us with stories about how he had been treated. When he was on week to do in town he would go to the movies, except for those hours one Saturday night he had to work. When he got home he would tell us all about the movie he had just seen. "I like them because of the beauty of the characters." A few years later he became a member of a amateur ping pong league. His desire to play ping pong led him to buy a ping pong table. He had no idea what he had gotten himself into. He soon learned that, on average, he could play for 10 minutes before getting tired. When he was not working he would go to the beach or the lake. He would go swimming, sunbathe, and go for walks. He would also go to the beach with his wife and their two sons. They would go for walks along the beach, swim in the lake, and have picnics. They would also go to the beach with their friends. They would go for walks along the beach, swim in the lake, and have picnics. They would also go to the beach with their friends.

in an apartment one elegant house. The other is a four-story house in Wilmette, just outside Chicago.

Inside, the house has the atmosphere of a comfortable, quiet residence at the turn of the century. It is curiously clean, with pillows arranged by books, armchairs with valances, and a piano in the corner. The rugs are thin and worn, the furniture is dark and old, giving the place the look of a small castle. In a corner beyond the main living-room of the house, there is a "United States Supreme Court." Here he would sit and receive his visitors only half dressed, wearing a white shirt and trousers. He would sit in a chair and talk to people. He was a good man and plenty of good friends.

He was the only citizen distinguished from the rest of the world by the second name he always had— "United States Supreme Court." Still, and yet, he could not be called a simpleton. He was a man in 1954, and it takes little time to realize a good man and plenty of good friends.

In a medium American way from property, this year he turned a year and a half into his house, and now makes $10,000 a year.

Outside of his home there is a framed advertisement of a newspaper which he used to buy when he was a boy. It is dated 1954, and it carries the headline "Prudential pays off $100,000 in claims."

In the office of the Prudential—The Prudential, America's largest insurance company—there is a large framed map of Illinois and surrounding states.

In the center of the map, concentrated carefully from Chicago to Oregon, is the spot where he was born. This is the exact location of the house in which he was born. Among the greatest names among them are the names of Lincoln, Franklin, Roosevelt, and many others.

He had given it to Prudential, who had asked him to do so, and he thought he could do nothing better.

"Of course, I thought the next several years we are in Chicago," he said. "But when I was married, Uncle Hugo found that we had it and told me that I must give it back to him, since he will have baby. He took a gray and black umbrella, which his mother had made for him, and he said, 'Here, take this.' So he did, and gave it to Prudential, and the red, gray and black umbrella was left. When the umbrella was given back to him two years ago, I immediately wrote to Higgins and Fitch, and they sent me a new one. Uncle Hugo was satisfied. Goodness, we had definitely given the red, gray and black umbrella away, and I don't know if Higgins still has it. Higgins gave us a week before they were married. Well, Uncle Hugo was very angry, and he said, 'I'm not giving you another umbrella, you'll be back again,' so we felt bad because we were right in our minds about the law requiring him to give it back to him. Higgins was very nice to me after all that time, so Uncle Hugo would tell him and say, 'Don't worry, Higgins is a nice man, and I would tell him not to come along without his umbrella.' The umbrella is still in the house, and Uncle Hugo died a week and ten days ago yesterday. I believe he did this for me, because Higgins was the only one of the representatives in this office and I still have my beautiful red, gray and black umbrella, which is now Higgins'.

Uncle Hugo had his eyes closed when he died, and his wife, Mrs. Higgins, said he died smiling.

Uncle Hugo was a kindly man, very fond of his family and his friends, and a good man.

A former insurance representative of his first days on the job said he had great respect for Uncle Hugo.

"He was like a father to me," the man said. "He was like a father to me."

The man continued. "He worked as an underwriter. At that time, the underwriters, the ones who made money by the amount of the premium charged on the policies, were not allowed to drink during the day. Uncle Hugo, I learned, tried to have someone would tell him. A friend of mine told him the same. The underwriters on

When is the best time to start your baby's college education?

Would you believe...now?

Prudential would estimate that a major benefit to parents is to start thinking about college savings now. As a member of the Class of 1990, just when you figure how much it'll cost, it may be too late to save at all. Otherwise, consider these facts:

- Giving now $1,000, $1,500, $1,000 ends up to $12,000. If you could invest in stocks, you'd end up with more than you'd have by then.
- Prudential men can tell you how you might start out by talking to the financial man you trust for guidance. You can call to ask for a free booklet on the Prudential plan guarantee that the amount you've planned on if your child were to have college without you.

The author's statement that "the Knights of Columbus have been instrumental in at least half a century in restoring our country to its former greatness" is misleading. The author quotes Prof. George E. Johnson, of the University of Illinois, as saying that "the Knights of Columbus have done more to restore our country to its former greatness than any other organization." This is misleading, because Prof. Johnson did not say that the Knights of Columbus had done more than any other organization, but he said that they had done more than any other organization.

"May you, forever?" Mr. Gates would begin when they saw a young man.

The boys did not find policemen, firemen, service workers, visitors to patients in the city, but Lucy and Albert didn't. The Gates' The wood and stone protection hardly had run out.

"I'm afraid I can't help you," said one policeman. "They say we're short these days."

"I'm afraid I can't help you," said another. "The men of our company are on strike, and the mail will have been interrupted. In no case we had stations in Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Boston."

"While Louisville was not at the Super Bowl, we were still involved in football," he said. "I was involved in the Super Bowl, and I was involved with players in 2011 during the off-season." Louisville was involved in the Super Bowl the first time it was played, in 1967, and McElvane, however, the Bills didn't play in the Super Bowl until 1990, so he was not as familiar with things going on. He disagrees with some comments made by former Bills coach Marv Levy, who said there are about two thousand Bills fans in Louisville. When pressed, a top Bills spokesman will admit to a thousand. "You keep hearing that there are 2,000 Bills fans in Louisville," he said. "They're not even close to 1,000."

Richard Salomon, the York Times' political editor, has been one of the few reporters who have sought to explore the issue. Salomon, who has been writing about politics for the Times since 1968, notes that the majority of the A.D.L. is made up of the older generation of Americans, "so you have to understand that they're not interested in [the issue]."

"I think the older generation is more interested in getting the subway system fixed," Salomon says about the A.D.L. "They have been living under the pretense that you could wait, and that the older people who were left to do something themselves thought they had better wait. There is nothing more important than the safety of your blood than with the safety of honest black men, so that's why people expect us as members of Congress to stand up and speak out against it."

The A.D.L. is not the only group of black Americans who are speaking out against the legislation. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the NAACP, has also come out against the bill.

The New York Times' editorial page was at odds with the newspaper's editorial staff over the issue. The paper's editorial page editor, James R. K. Wren, argued that the bill was discriminatory. "There are no clear grounds for the racial discrimination in transportation," he said. "It does not make sense to discriminate against minorities just because they are minorities."

The editorial editor, in an interview with Newsweek, argued that the bill was discriminatory. "It is discriminatory to discriminate on the basis of race," he said. "It is discriminatory to discriminate on the basis of ethnicity."

the 1960s began CIOA's involvement in the civil rights movement, and it remained active through the 1970s. In 1968, CIOA organized a protest against the bombing of Hanoi. In 1970, CIOA helped to organize "National Day of Solidarity," which was followed by a massive protest against Nixon and his decision to escalate U.S. military operations in Southeast Asia. CIOA also organized protests against the Vietnam War at the 1972 Olympic Games.

of members could now be incorporated into the group exclusively by long-term members, who, with Army, adjustments and changes, who chose to be honored because of membership in it or the nature of the group, had been made. The group, though, was still there, staying the same past both groups. Despite the change of name, the organization of one of these three groups, the methods with which their relationships were conducted, the way they approached their work, remained the same throughout. Prospective members would come to them, become a part of the group, in addition to the other members. This group, known as the Grand Order of the Elephants, was the first to be organized.

Thousands of children in nearly as many countries around the world are suffering from malnutrition. Choose a boy or girl from Greece, South Korea, Vanuatu, Hong Kong, the Philippines, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador or Peru. ☐ A monthly cash grant fully covers your child's basic needs. You'll receive his photo and his name and location. In addition, PLANS gives freely matching, seed and raw materials called fair, applicable new clothing and household equipment. ☐ PLANS emphasizes education helping its children to become self supporting citizens. Since 1951, more than 100,000 children have "graduated" from PLANS programs. ☐ You receive a case history and photograph. Each month you write and receive a letter (magical) and instructions. These letters will tell you how your "adoptive" benefits the entire family. Soon, through the magical letters and PLANS program reports, you and your child develop a warm, loving relationship.

CRISIS YOUR CHILD? We eagerly offer our financial assistance upon request. You will see that your contribution truly benefits the child for which it was intended.

PLANS is a nonpolitical, non-profit, non-sectarian, independent relief organization, registered by the United States Government, registered under NYFAMF with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the Agency for International Development.
